The San Domingo Investigation—The Committee's Report will Exonerate Gen. Babcock—Mr. Sumner's Course on this Question—Status of the Treaty.

From Our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, June 18, 1870.

The report in the San Domingo investigation will be made to the Senate on Monday or Tuesday next. From the nature of the testimony there is no hazard in the prediction that the report will show that the negotiation of the treaty was conducted without the exercise of a single doubtful power, or the use of a single improper influence. The charges of jobbery, though not made in the resolution directing the inquiry, have necessarily come under the purview of the Committee, and have been shown to be utterly without foundation. The grievance of Mr. HATCH, whose memorial was made the basis of the investigation, has been entirely disproved. From that gentleman's letters Senator FERRY was led to believe, apparently, that Gen. BABCOCK was empowered to effect Mr. HATCH's release and that he refused to do it. The testimony shows that he had no instructions on the subject, that he knew nothing of Mr. HATCH's imprisonment save what he heard on the streets, and that he took no part in his matter, one way or the other—which was precisely his line of duty. The testimony further shows that Mr. HATCH was leniently, instead of cruelly treated, by the Dominican Government. His concessions were not taken from him and granted to others, as he claims, but stand valid today in his name. He was imprisoned, as he richly deserved to be, for a flagrant crime against that Government, by which he placed himself beyond the protection of his own Government, and for which the Dominican Government would have been justified in executing him—a crime equivalent to treason. He granted a clearance and bill of health to LUTERNOV's piratical steamer Telegraph, from a Dominican port which was not a port of entry, and it is a lenient Government which, weak as the Dominicans are, can overlook an offense of that nature. Suppose a subject of Spain, during our rebellion, had cleared a rebel pirate—or, granting belligerency—a rebel cruiser, from the port of Yonkers, how would the offense have been treated by our Government? And this is precisely what Mr. DAVID HATCH did, and he claims protection from imprisonment for such an act, at the hands of our Government, and beyond this, it is a well-ascertained fact, though I cannot say that it was brought out in the evidence, that HATCH's store was a rebel arsenal, and his house was used to make bullets in to shoot the adherents of the BASE Government. This is one of a class of many cases of outrages upon American citizens with which our Government has had to deal. These people venture into such transactions, by which they clearly forfeit all right to our protection, and when they get into trouble throw themselves upon their rights (!) as American citizens. More than one case of "outrage" in Cuba as well as elsewhere, has been of this character. A minority of the Committee will doubtless make a minority report, though there is nothing to base any difference upon save the unsupported and contradictory testimony of FERRY.

MR. SUMNER'S COURSE ON THIS QUESTION.

There is much comment upon the attitude of Mr. SUMNER in this matter. In the debate which preceded the investigation, the President was grossly insulted by the broad intimations of corruption in the treaty, and in speaking of Gen. BABCOCK, Mr. SUMNER used highly extravagant language when he said "the offense in rank; it were difficult to characterize it." Now this offense was Gen. BABCOCK's action under the order of the President. As a military officer he could not make, but he could assist in the negotiation of a treaty. He was simply the channel of communication between the State Department and the Base Government. He had strict instructions from which he knew he could not depart without suffering Court-martial and disgrace. Yet Mr. SUMNER, in his place in the Senate, rises and charges an officer holding a confidential relation to the President, of honorable record and hitherto unsullied fame, and who is not only constitutionally prohibited from calling him to account for words spoken in his place, but who by the articles of war is debarred from ever speaking disrespectfully of Mr. SUMNER as a senator, "with a rank offense" which it is "difficult to characterize." It must indeed be an offense extraordinary when Mr. SUMNER's vocabulary fails to depict it. But if there is any "rank offense" in this matter, it is with Mr. SUMNER himself. If he had reason to believe that Gen. BABCOCK was guilty of any improper act, it was plainly his duty as a Senator, and as a Republican, to bring the matter to the personal attention of the President, for it is an insult to the President's integrity and to his personal sense of honor, for a man of Mr. SUMNER's position to intimate, or even to suspect, that an officer holding such confidential relations should be guilty of official misconduct with the President's sanction, or even knowledge. Had Mr. SUMNER laid his grievance before the President, Gen. BABCOCK could have been ordered to appear before a Court of Inquiry and there purge himself of the charge, and if he failed he would not only have been disgraced in his military standing, but would have been farther liable to punishment at the hands of a civil tribunal. Had Mr. SUMNER done this, it would not require a third party to intercede in his behalf for more amicable relations with the President of the United States.

WHY THE PRESIDENT EMPLOYED GEN. BABCOCK.

The President chose to employ, in this negotiation a commissioner whom he knew he could trust to conduct a matter requiring great caution and much discretion. From the moment he was inaugurated he was approached with propositions for the annexation of this island which had also been made under the previous Administration. He turned a deaf ear to the representations of unauthorized and private parties. On more than one occasion he refused to admit them to his presence. When he was ready the matter was placed in the hands of one of his most trusted men, who in all the various phases and depths of perilous and delicate service had never failed him. This gentleman happened to be a military officer. That is the "rank offense" with Mr. SUMNER and a few other gentlemen in the Senate. They have a dislike and contempt for "the military" influence which they suppose controls affairs. The President himself is not so long out of his buttons and shoulder-straps as to be beyond the range of their lofty contempt.

STATUS OF THE TREATY.

The treaty of annexation is not likely to be ratified. It never yet had the required two-thirds, and though this investigation will in no wise damage it, there is no likelihood that it will change any Senator's vote. There are grounds of public policy sufficient to justify any Senator in voting against it who feels that annexation ought not to carry. But there are other influences at work to kill the treaty. Propositions have not been wanting from well known lobbyists to enter the lists for ratification, but as they met with no response, so far as they have executed any influence at all, it has been against the treaty. There was "no money in it." What is known in Washington as the "guerrilla newspaper influence" has also been against the treaty, as well as the influence of several correspondents whose integrity is above suspicion. But I have no doubt a few thousand dollars expended here during the past six months could have changed the current of much of the outside talk on this matter.

CYMON.

Cabinet Rumors—The Attorney-Generalship and the State Department—The Tax Bill—Death of Col. Crowe, of Alabama—Cheap Ocean Telegraphing—The President's Contemplated Visit to Connecticut.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—A rumor was very current yesterday to the effect that the President has decided to withdraw the nomination of Mr. AKERMAN as Attorney-General and send in the name of Senator WILLIAMS, of Oregon. It was without foundation, of course, and it was improbable on the face of it, as the President does not act in that way on such a matter. The Senate will probably be left either to confirm or reject the nomination of Mr. AKERMAN. It is but expressing a very general feeling, however, to say that the nomination of Senator WILLIAMS to any position in the Cabinet would be received with great satisfaction. One of the Cabinet rumors put afloat to-night, runs in the following positive form, viz.: "From most unquestioned authority the statement is today obtained that Secretary FISH will retire from the Cabinet as soon as the President decides on his successor. It is probable that the change will be made before the President goes to Long Branch."

THE TAX BILL.

The Senate Finance Committee will be ready to report to-morrow if they can settle the only two questions yet open—the income tax and Bessemer steel. The rate of the income tax is agreed to as the House fixed it, but there is a disagreement about the amount of the exemption. The House rates on tea and coffee are accepted. On sugar there are some slight but unimportant changes. The Committee rejects the House advance on wines, cordials and imported liquors, and also the increase on meat and the spices and on nickel. Jute is reduced from $10, as in the House bill, to $6, the existing rate. Pig-iron and scrap-iron are accepted at the House rates, and the free list of the House is accepted with but few alterations.

DEATH OF COL. CROWE.

Col. C. C. CROWE, who was confirmed on Friday as Secretary of Utah Territory, died at his residence, in Alabama, Saturday, of consumption. It will be remembered that over a year ago Col. CROWE was appointed Governor of New-Mexico, but could not qualify because his disabilities had not been removed. Since then he had been relieved, and appointed Receiver of the Land Office in New-Mexico, but before qualifying he was appointed to his new position, from which he is now forever removed.

OCEAN CABLES.

There are now two important cable bills before the Senate which have a prospect of a passage at this session. One proposes to lay a cable between the United States and Belgium, under the most favorable rules and regulations for the use of the wires by both the Government and individuals. The projectors aver that they can bring the price of messages to $1, and they ask no exclusive rights or privileges. The corporators of this Company are Robert Squires, Lyman Tremain, Erastus Corning, Jr., Isaiah Blood, Hiram Barney, Geo. W. Riggs, J. H. Lathrop, George Harrington, Wm. C. Barney, Joseph J. Bartlett, John L. Merriam and James B. Hubbell. The other project is to lay a cable from the coast of New-Jersey to the Bermuda Islands. The object being to lay a further cable thence to the Azores, and thence to Lisbon, where the connections will be made with the system of Continental Europe and the lines to Egypt and India. The corporators in this line are Alexander Hamilton, Jr., David Henry Haight, John Jacob Astor, Jr., Robert J. Livingston, Wm. Curry, Wm. G. Fargo, James T. Sanford, John Bigelow, Wm. T. Blodgett, James A. Scrymser, Geo. L. Schuyler and Wm. Farrar Smith.

THE PRESIDENT'S FOURTH OF JULY TRIP.

Since it became known that the President would visit Connecticut about the Fourth of July, a large number of cities and towns in that State have signified a desire to welcome him, but he has declined in every case to allow additions to be made to the original programme. He will leave here with his family and staff on Friday evening, July 1, accompanied by Gen. BUTLER, who is the orator for the occasion, and will be joined in New-York by the other orators, HENRY WARD BEECHER and CHESTER A. WOODFORD. They will breakfast in New-York, and leave at once for Hartford, where they will attend a card reception at Gov. JEWELL's. Sunday will be spent in Hartford, and a special train early on Monday morning will take the party to Woodstock to attend the celebration, at which Senator BUCKINGHAM will preside and deliver an address, to be followed by orations from WOODFORD, BEECHER and BUTLER.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

BUSINESS IN CONGRESS.

Three general appropriation bills are yet to be considered by the two Houses of Congress, viz., Appropriations for Sundry Civil Expenses, the Army Appropriation bill, and that for fortifications. The Legislative, Judicial and Executive Appropriation bill has passed both Houses, and is now in Conference Committee. The Indian Appropriation bill has passed both branches, but returned from the Senate with amendments, which have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Naval Appropriation bill has passed the House, but has not been acted upon by the Senate; and so with the Consular and Diplomatic and the River and Harbor bills. Besides the above, the Pension bill, which had passed both Houses, was yesterday in the hands of a second Committee of Conference. There are also pending, among other measures, the Internal Revenue and Tariff bill, the Funding bill, and the Currency bill, and the Cuban resolution recently passed by the House; besides uncompleted action on additional important measures. At present there are on the Speaker's table seventy-five Senate bills. Although only twenty-three working days remain of the Session, (as heretofore limited by joint resolution,) it is supposed that Congress will be able to adjourn by the 15th of July. Of course much unfinished business will necessarily be continued until the next session. It is possible, however, that Congress may extend the session until Monday, the 18th of July, if the crowding of business (transacted towards the time fixed) should prevent the timely engrossing of the bills, in which case Sunday would be occupied in that business.

REVENUE DECISION.

The Secretary of the Treasury has made the following decisions: [illegible]

A writing in the nature of a bill of sale of a vessel must be recorded in the Custom-house unless marine papers can be issued. Leather imported in vessel must be entered immediately on its arrival at a port in the United States. The proceeds of a sale of wreck-based goods after defraying expenses of sale, duties, are to be paid in current funds and converted into coin at the premium prevailing on the day of sale. The duty due on the goods, if any, must be paid in gold. Imported roofing tin is liable to a duty of thirty-five per cent. ad valorem. Machinery imported, to be used only experimentally in divesting ramie fiber of its woolen substance, being fit for use, is not entitled to exemption from duty as "models of invention."

BLACK BEAVER, THE DELAWARE.

The claim of BLACK BEAVER, a Delaware Indian, is now before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. He belongs to the Delaware tribe and was in the employ of the Government all or nearly all of the time since the commencement of the Mexican war. During that war he was Captain of a company of Delawares and Shawnees in the United States Army. Since that time, up to the commencement of the late war, he had been employed as guide and interpreter by the different commanding officers at the posts of Forts Arbuckle and Cobb in the Indian Territory, and by the superintendents and agents for the Indians in the vicinity of those forts. He was at Fort Arbuckle about five years and at Fort Cobb one year immediately preceding the last war, and during that time had invested all of his means and savings in cattle and hogs, and had at the breaking out of the war a large stock. In the Spring of 1861 Gen. EMORY requested him to guide his command, as also the combined commands from Forts Smith, Cobb and Arbuckle, to Fort Leavenworth, but he hesitated about leaving his stock until Gen. EMORY assured him that he should be paid by the Government for his losses, and on that representation he complied with the request and came with the command to Fort Leavenworth and remained there till the war ended. When he returned to his place he found his stock was all gone, some of the cattle having been killed by the wild Indians and some by the Southern Army. He has never realized a cent for the property he abandoned, and is now in need. He sums up his losses at $22,365. Gen. EMORY speaks of BLACK BEAVER's invaluable services, and urgently presses the justice of the claim of "this aged and worthy man."

CANADIAN FISHING GROUNDS.

A Circular from the Treasury Department—Rights and Privileges of American Fishermen on British Waters.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—The Secretary of the Treasury has issued the following circular relating to Canadian in-shore fisheries:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, June 9, 1870.

SIR: In compliance with the request of the Secretary of State, you are hereby authorized and directed to inform the masters of fishing vessels, at the time of clearance from your port, that the authorities of the Dominion of Canada have terminated the system of granting fishing licenses to foreign vessels, under which they have heretofore been permitted to fish within the maritime jurisdiction of the said Dominion—that is to say, within three marine miles of the shores thereof; and that all fishermen of the United States are prohibited from the use of such in-shore fisheries, except so far as stipulated in the first article of the treaty of October 20, 1818, between the United States and Great Britain, in view of which the fishermen of the United States have, in common with the subjects of her Britannic Majesty, the liberty to take fish of every kind on that part of the southern coast of Newfoundland which extends from Cape Ray to the Rameau Islands; on the western and northern coasts of Newfoundland, from the said Cape Ray to the Quirpon Islands; on the shores of the Magdalen Islands; and, also, on the coasts, bays, harbors and creeks, from Mount Joly, which was, when the treaty was signed, on the southern coast of Labrador, to and through the straits of Belle Isle, and thence northwardly, indefinitely along the coast, without prejudice, however, to any exclusive rights of the Hudson's Bay Company; and have also liberty forever to dry and cure fish in any of the unsettled bays, harbors and creeks of the southern part of the coast of Newfoundland, above described, and of the coast of Labrador, unless the same, or any portion thereof, be settled, in which case it is not lawful for the said fishermen to dry or cure fish at such portion so settled without previous agreement for such purpose with the inhabitants, proprietors or possessors of the ground, and also are admitted to enter any other bays or harbors for the purpose of shelter and of repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood and of obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever, subject to such regulations as may be made to prevent their taking, drying or curing fish therein, or in any other manner whatever abusing the privileges reserved to them as above expressed. Fishermen of the United States are bound to respect the British laws and regulations for the regulation and preservation of the fisheries to the same extent and in the same way as are applicable to British or Canadian fishermen.

The Canadian law of the 22d of May, 1868, 31 Victoria, Cap. 61, entitled, "An act respecting fishing by foreign vessels," and the act amended to on the 19th of May, 1869, entitled "An act to amend the act respecting fishing by foreign vessels," among other things, enacts—

That any commissioned officer of her Majesty's navy, serving on board of any vessel of her Majesty's navy, or acting and being in the waters of Canada, for the purpose of affording protection to her Majesty's subjects thereof, and the officer or any commissioned officer of her Majesty's navy, Sheriff, Officer, or stipendiary magistrate on board of any vessel belonging to or in the service of the Government of Canada and duly authorized for the purpose by the Minister of Marine, or any officer of the Customs of Canada, Sheriff, Magistrate or other person duly commissioned for that purpose, may go on board of any ship, vessel or boat, being within any harbor in Canada, hovering (in British waters) within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks or harbors in Canada, and may on board so long as she may remain within such limits, or discovered outside of the limits, hover or pursue as are above mentioned, any such ship, vessel or boat, being within any harbor in Canada or hovering (in British waters) within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks or harbors in Canada, into port, and search her cargo, and may also examine the master upon oath touching the cargo and voyage; and if the master or person in charge of such ship, vessel or boat, shall refuse to answer to such examination or shall further refuse to bring such ship, vessel or boat into port on being required so to do, according to the laws of the United Kingdom or of Canada, and has fished or shall be found preparing to fish within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks or harbors of Canada not included within the three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks or harbors of the period named in the last license granted to such ship, vessel or boat, under the five sections of this act, such ship, vessel or boat, and the tackle, rigging, guns, apparel, furniture and appurtenances belonging to such ship, vessel or boat, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores and cargo liable to forfeiture under this act may be seized by any officer of Customs or other person authorized in the second section of this act. And every person opposing any officer or person in the execution of his duty under the act, or any person, being the master of any such ship, vessel or boat, shall forfeit $200, and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

It will be observed that the warning formerly given is not required under the amended act, but that vessels trespassing are liable to seizure without such warning.

On the 8th of January, 1870, the Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada, in council, ordered that suitable sailing vessels, similar to the La Canadienne, be chartered and equipped for the service of protecting the Canadian in-shore fisheries against illegal encroachments by foreigners, these vessels to be connected with the Police force of Canada, and to form a marine branch of the same. It is understood that by a change of the boundaries between Canada and Labrador, the Canadian territory now includes Mount Joly, and a portion of the shore to the east thereof, which, in the treaty of 1818, was described as the southern coast of Labrador. This municipal change of boundary does not, however, interfere with the rights of American fishermen, as defined by the treaty, on that portion of what was the southern coast of Labrador, east of Mount Joly. Very respectfully,

GEORGE S. BOUTWELL, Secretary of the Treasury.

Street Disturbances in Jersey City.

At about 11 o'clock last night a squad of Jersey City Police broke up an incipient riot in Grove-street, near Bidwell-avenue, and captured six of the participants of the Police Station. Three of these—PETER MCGOVERN, PAT MCGOVERN and THOMAS BRADY—were committed for examination. According to the statements of both parties, it appears that Mr. BENJAMIN GREGORY, ex-Secretary of Legation under Gen. KILPATRICK to the Republic of Chili, had spent the evening at the house of a woman named NELLIE CURTIS, in Jersey-avenue, where he became intoxicated and noisy. Miss CURTIS' brother, "Tim" CURTIS, and one MIKE BEARE, an undertaker, took GREGORY out of the house and started to convey him home. On the way they fell in with the MCGOVERNS and BRADY, and a fight ensued, in which the latter and CURTIS were seriously hurt. A large crowd collected around the belligerents, and when the row was broken up by a charge of the Police, nearly 100 persons followed to the Police station.

THE GERMAN FESTIVAL.

The Saengerfest—Meeting of the Saengerbund—Change in the Constitution—An Accident.

CINCINNATI, June 19.—At a meeting of the members of the Saengerbund yesterday morning a new constitution was adopted. The meetings will hereafter occur every two years. Competitive singing is specially provided for. The other changes are not important. A commission was appointed to examine the cases of the delinquent societies that go out under the previous action of the Bund. Yesterday evening as the watchman at the Saengerfest building was lighting the gas the flame came in contact with some decorations, which took fire. The flames were extinguished with no more damage than the destruction of two or three flags, but the consequences were disastrous. The fire alarm was turned on and the engines were quickly on the spot. As they were approaching, a horse attached to a buggy took fright and ran off, injuring four persons. A Mrs. WOLF was so badly injured that she will probably die. GEORGE HARTLY, six years old, was dangerously injured in the breast. WILLIAM OTTO, the same age, was seriously hurt, Mrs. OTTO, who interfered to save her boy, received some injuries. The audience at the closing concert last night was large, though less than on the preceding evening. The entertainment opened with the first movement of the overture to MENDELSSOHN's "Calm Sea," which was executed still more successfully than the night before. Then followed choruses by single societies. The Louisville Frohsinn sang "Beautiful Rhine," the Sandusky Maennerchor "The German Muse," both of which were heartily appreciated; the Cleveland Maennerchor, the "Turkish Drinking Song;" the Wooster Maennerchor, the "Forest Prayer;" the Cleveland Germania, the "Water Lily;" the Columbus Maennerchor, "God, Be Thou With Me," and the Arion des Westens, from St. Louis, "Wandersen Ostefest." The orchestra formed a larghetto from the symphony in D by BEETHOVEN. The scherzo and adagio movements in the Columbus symphony were performed. The latter was a great improvement over the previous efforts. The Bund closed the vocal part of the performance with "This is the Day of Our Lord." The grand orchestra then executed the allegro movement to the Columbus Symphony and the musical part of the great Saengerfest of the North American Saengerbund was concluded. Most of the choruses were encored. The total receipts at the concerts have been about $20,000.

The grand Saengerfest pic-nic came off today at Short's Grove. Steam-boats were plying between the city and grounds all day, and trains were running at short intervals. About 40,000 persons were present. Speeches were made by Dr. LILIENTHAL, Dr. WIZE, Judge STALLO and WILLIAM S. FURAY. The singers in attendance upon the Saengerfest were banqueted, and the day was largely spent in singing, instrumental music and festivity. The immense concourse was orderly. An accident occurred to the steamer San Francisco, which was very near being serious. She had been chartered to convey persons to the pic-nic, and while endeavoring to pass a bridge, her chimney struck. About one hundred persons on board were greatly frightened. Some endeavored to jump overboard, but were restrained. The pilot-house was completely demolished. FRANK ROBINSON, the pilot, was seriously injured, and JAMES H. TRAY, a boy, bruised.

Mutiny—The Brig Josephine Overhauled in Hampton Roads.

NORFOLK, Va., June 19.—United States Deputy Marshal FARRELL overhauled and boarded the Italian brig Josephine, this morning, in the lower bay, and arrested her mate and crew, who are charged by the pilot, GEORGE W. COLE, who piloted the brig down Chesapeake Bay, with mutiny and attempting to take his life. The Josephine was towed to this city. Her mate and crew were brought before United States Commissioner FOSTER. After a preliminary examination, the crew were returned to the custody of the Marshal, and the mate was released on parole to appear before the Commissioner to-morrow morning for further examination. The officers of the brig claim that the pilot was insane, and that the dangers he apprehended were merely imaginary.

THE WEST.

Experiments with Arms—Report of the Board Convened at St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, June 19.—The Board of Army Officers, of which Gen. SCHOFIELD is President, appointed by Gen. SHERMAN to select and report upon small arms and accoutrements for the use of the United States, concluded their experiments last week. The number of small arms and accoutrements presented for the consideration of the Board was enormously large, consisting of forty-eight different systems of breech-loading rifles, carbines, pistols and revolvers, each possessing distinct peculiarities and each valuable and ingenious improvements on former systems. Sets of accoutrements, cartridge-boxes, &c., were presented. The Board subjected all the arms to rigid tests and experiments, the result of which will be promulgated only through official reports. Among those tested are included several sent by European manufacturers and now in use by some European Governments. But although excellent as weapons they were found to be inferior to many American inventions. Hereafter the rifle for the infantry, and the carbine and pistol for the cavalry, will be made on the same system of breech mechanism, and each with a caliber of fifty inches. As soon as the selections of this Board are introduced, the troops, it is thought, will be armed and equipped in a superior manner to any European armies. The same officers have also been intrusted with the revision of tactics for the cavalry, artillery and infantry. They have harmonized the tactics for the three arms of service as far as practicable, and simplified the whole system of commands, establishing them upon a regulated and uniform basis. A committee of the Board are now at Fort Hayes, Kansas, where eight companies have assembled to allow them to practically test the new tactics.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 18.—A party of Indians attacked a train of several wagons and twenty men near Camp Grant, Arizona, May 27, and captured and burned the wagons, killed one man and wounded several. The remainder fled to the mountains and probably perished.

Shooting Affray—Steam-Boat Movements.

FORT BENTON, Montana, June 19.—The steamer Bertha & Benjamin arrived this morning.

Yerba Buena Island—San Francisco Harbor Commissioner Appointed—Mining Stocks.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 18.—The Bulletin recommends the sale of half of Yerba Buena Island to the Central Pacific Railroad Company for $250,000, and that the proceeds be appropriated for the erection of a Government building in this city, thus saving $70,000 a year rent for Government offices....A freight car from the Erie Railroad, having Snow's adjustable gauge, has arrived here without breaking bulk.... WASHINGTON BARTLETT has been appointed Harbor Commissioner vice CUTLER, deceased.... Mining shares are active; Alpha, $8; Belcher, $3; Choller, $26; Crown Point, $9; Gould and Curry, $73; Hale and Norcross, $101; Imperial, $33; Kentuck, $27; Ophir, $24; Overman, $33; Savage, $33; Yellow Jacket, $47.

The game of billiards last night between LATTER and MCCLEARY for a silver cup and the championship of the Pacific Coast, 1,200 points, push and crotch shots barred, was won by the former in seventy-five innings. The score was: LATTER, 1,200; MCCLEARY, 675....Late Arizona advices have been received. The Indians continue to commit depredations. The troops have killed a number of savages....The weather is unfavorable, but the crops are as yet uninjured. The mining news is encouraging.

Horrible Murder in Connecticut—Assault by a Brother with an Ax—Death of a Prominent Citizen—Medical.

HARTFORD, Conn., June 19.—ALEXANDER TAYLOR murdered THO. MCCAULEY, in a drunken affray, in Portland, in this State, yesterday. MCCAULEY received a fearful wound from a knife near the heart, and another in the abdomen. Three men concerned in this affair were arrested, but the real murderer escaped. He is about twenty-one years old, five feet nine inches high, sandy complexion, freckled face, blue eyes and face clean shaved....In the same town, this afternoon, EDWARD BARRY brutally assaulted his brother, JOHN BARRY, with an ax, inflicting wounds that may prove fatal....OLIVER ELLSWORTH WILLIAMS, formerly a practicing lawyer in this city, and a well-known citizen, died on Saturday, at the age of seventy-four years. Mr. WILLIAMS was once Quartermaster-General of the State, and about the time GEORGE D. PRENTICE was in editorial life in this city edited the Connecticut Mirror, a weekly journal then published here.... The Yale College Base-Ball Club, of the class of '73, beat the Charter Oak Club, of this city, yesterday. The score was 24 to 12....The Convention of Medical Superintendents of the Insane adjourned yesterday, after an interesting session of four days. At the Saturday morning session Dr. JARVIS, of Boston, read a paper on treatment of the milder classes of insane. The Convention passed resolutions expressing satisfaction with the arrangements for the comfort and pleasure of the members in Hartford, and thanks for courtesies received from citizens. The next Convention will be held in Toronto on the first Tuesday in June, 1871.

CENTRAL AMERICA.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM-SHIP MERRIMAC FROM RIO JANEIRO.

The steam-ship Merrimac, from Rio Janeiro, arrived at this port. Our thanks are due to Mr. W. D. SHOWE, Purser of the Merrimac, and the Purser of the steamer Shannon, from Aspinwall for Southampton, for the prompt delivery of letters and files.

Great Fire in Panama—Safety of the Henry Chauncey—The George M. Upton—Forwarding the Mails—The Revolution—Action of the Congress on the Canal Treaty—The Survey Discontinued.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ASPINWALL, COLON, U. S. C., Sunday, June 5, 1870.

I avail myself of the departure of the Royal Mail Steam-ship Shannon, for Southampton, this P. M., to send you the following important information, via St. Thomas.

The Panama Railroad Company's telegraph announces the destruction of a large portion of the business part of the City of Panama. At an early hour this morning the Aspinwall Hotel, situated on the corner of Main-street and Calle de Pastigo, was discovered to be on fire. The flames advanced with terrible rapidity, consuming the entire building, sweeping down Calle de Pastigo to Calle de San Juan de Dios. The wind blowing from the north-west, the fire swept down San Juan de Dios-street, consuming all before it. The Bank of Panama is burned, and the Cathedral has been on fire in several places. The Church ornaments are strewn about the Plaza in all directions, and the people are fleeing before the flames. At the hour I write—11½ A. M.—the wind has died away, and it is hoped that any further destruction of property may be stayed. Twelve lives are reported lost, and it is supposed a number are buried beneath the ruins of the Aspinwall Hotel. The Panama Railroad Company sent a special train to Panama as soon as the news reached this city, with their fire-engine and a large number of men.

THE HENRY CHAUNCEY.

I wrote by the steam-ship George B. Upton, which sailed hence for New-York on the evening of the 3d instant, informing you that the steam-ship Henry Chauncey sailed from Aspinwall with 422 passengers, the regular mails and a full cargo of freight, at 11½ P. M. June 3, and 12½ A. M. the following day she broke her port shaft, and returned to this place, arriving at 4 A. M.

THE UPTON.

The steam-ship Geo. B. Upton, above referred to, is the vessel which left New-York on the 16th ult., of which the New-York papers said she had been fitted out as a man of war, and carried the Cuban flag at her peak. There is no truth in the statement, as she arrived here flying the Stars and Stripes, and, I understand, her papers are all correct. She cleared for New-York and intermediate ports on the 3d. She took a number of passengers, Cubans, and, it is said, some suspicious-looking freight.

PREPARATIONS TO FORWARD THE MAILS.

On the return of the Chauncey, Mr. PERRY, the American Consul, immediately notified the agent of the Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company that if the steamer would be detained here any length of time, he should dispatch a special messenger to Commander SELFRIDGE, at San Blas, and ask him to return to Aspinwall and receive on board the United States Mails, as it was Commander SELFRIDGE's intention to leave San Blas on or about the 8th instant, direct for New-York, the surveys having come to a close. The messenger was dispatched at 10 A. M., and the Nipsic is hourly expected here. Later in the day Capt. RATHBUN chartered a boat, and sent a message asking Commander SELFRIDGE to come and convey the disabled steamer to New-York, so that he might send the passengers and freight forward.

BOGOTA—THE CANAL QUESTION.

The news from Bogota, the capital of Columbia, is important. My usual letter contains full particulars of matters at the capital, and of the progress of the Darien expedition from the date of my last until its close, which completes the interesting history of the surveys. The Congress of Bogota are still arguing article by article of the canal treaty and making many amendments. They have passed an amendment in the Senate depriving the United States of any participation in negotiating treaties on the subject of guarantees, &c., with foreign Powers. Our Minister, Gen. HURLBUT, very properly informed them that such action closed all negotiations, and insured the rejection of the treaty by the United States. That it was insulting and could not for a moment be tolerated. The action will be reconsidered, unhoubtedly, but until it is Gen. HURLBUT will hold no communication with any one on the Canal question. Commander SELFRIDGE arrived off Aspinwall on the evening of the 30th ultimo, and on the 31st proceeded to Panama, where he had an interview with Lieut.-Com. EARTHAN. Before and up to his arrival here he was quite sanguine that he had found a feasible route for the great Canal at San Blas, but after learning the true state of affairs on the Pacific side, he very soon made up his mind to conclude the surveys and proceed to the United States, and so ends the great Darien Expedition. The surveys have shown to the world that no Canal can be built south of Panama. The health of the entire expedition is very good.

THE PANAMA FIRE.

Destruction of the Aspinwall Hotel, the Panama Bank, and many other Buildings—Twelve Lives Lost—Others Believed to be Buried in the Ruins.

PANAMA, June 5.—A terrible fire broke out here at 1½ this morning, and is now raging. The fire originated in the Aspinwall Hotel, and was communicated to RIVELLA's house, CARFRULLO's French Bazaar, the stores of Strasberg, F. C. Harbinger, Samuel Pizer & Co., Bergmoth, J. J. de Yeans, and Bernudez, and several private residences. It is now raging along San Juan de Dios-street, and has reached the Bank of Panama, which is in danger. Attempts are being made to blow up a house in rear of the bank, near the Cathedral, to prevent the spread of the flames to the Grand Hotel. The roof of the Cathedral is burning in several places. The Panama Mail office is in imminent danger. Families are rushing from their dwellings, and the streets and plaza are strewn with furniture and church ornaments. The supply of water is scanty, the people are inactive and under no direction, and the flames are allowed to do their terrible work almost unresisted. There is terrible excitement and bloodshed.

Later—The Fire Arrested—Many Lives Lost.

Eleven A. M.—The flames are subdued. Many casualties have occurred. The number of deaths are reported now at

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE ILIAD OF HOMER, translated into English blank verse by WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT. Volume II. Boston: FIELDS, OSGOOD & Co.

The appearance at this time, and in this country, of a first-rate translation of the Iliad, is an event of some significance. It is a tribute which the youngest child of civilization pays to him who has a better title than HERODOTUS to be called the father of history. It is likewise a protest against those tendencies of the hour which would discourage the study of the Greek and Latin literatures.

Winged words these poems may well be called, which, fledged in the dawn of time, have not yet faltered in their flight across the centuries. Their superiority as works of art is not more unquestionable than in their procreative power. They have ever been—to use MILTON'S words—as lively and as vigorously productive as those fabulous dragon's teeth. The history of Greek letters is in fact the genesis of the Iliad and Odyssey. Upon them ARISTOTLE based his canons; from them the Attic tragedy drew its inspiration and its argument. To the same source the most delightful of Greek historians referred his style and his method, while the choir of lyric and erotic poets confessed their debt to him "who gave them birth but higher sang." The direct action of the Homeric poems upon the masters of the Latin literature has been compared to that of the sunlight, but their indirect influence through the medium of Athenian models was pervasive and quickening as the solar heat. The development of poetry among Western nations can be accurately measured by the thoroughness with which they have assimilated HOMER. The Orlando and the Lusiad repeat the story of Odysseus. Even minor excellences of the Iliad are reproduced in the Jerusalem Delivered. MILTON and GOETHE have drawn copiously from the same stores. Nor is there a single modern poet of the first rank, with the exception of SHAKESPEARE, whose obligations to HOMER are not manifold and obvious.

It is true that the eighteenth century, which was to shatter so many idols, chose to depreciate these poems. Embellished by POPE, dissected by FONTENELLE and patronized by Mme. DACIER, they fell, it must be confessed, upon evil times. It is a suggestive commentary upon the siècle du goût that its arch-priest could pronounce the Iliad "une poeme qu'on admire et qu'on ne lit pas." To the author of the Henriade, HOMER was only a beau parleur. It is now many years since the stigma went home to roost. PERRAULT and LA MOTTE-HOUDARD, who knew him only in the rags and gyves of an obscure translation, point with a satisfied smirk to the "coarseness" and "barbarism" of HOMER. One is reminded of those Philistine Lords who flung their jests at Samson Agonistes while he leaned against the pillars in Gaza.

Of living English poets the strongest and sweetest acknowledge gratefully the source of their melody and strength. The fragment of an epic, which is, perhaps, the LAUREATE'S best work, was presented by the author as faint Homeric echoes. From HOMER, quite as truly as from CHAUCER, has the earthly paradise caught its genial sunshine and bracing air. The world, we presume, would have lost nothing had Mr. SWINBURNE read EURIPIDES less and the Iliad more. A timely reaction has set in against the morbid self-consciousness and the hankering after glitter and novelty which are sure precursors of decay. Of that reaction MATTHEW ARNOLD, who, in childhood, was taught to reverence HOMER, has been the prophet and protagonist. With the same movement the temper and discipline of Mr. BRYANT'S mind place him in active sympathy. We no not doubt that it was the aim of his Iliad to elevate and purify the taste of his countrymen. The success which his translation has already achieved augurs for it not a little influence upon the national literature. To the thoughtful artist SCHLEGEL can suggest nothing more useful than the study of casts from the antique. A faithful version of the Iliad opens whole galleries of casts. The sculptor BOUCHARDON, we are told, was discovered reading HOMER in a translation—and that a sorry one. "Ah, Monsieur!" he exclaimed, "depuis que j'ai lu ce livre il me semble que les hommes ont quinze pieds de haut!" We know what KEATS beheld upon looking into CHAPMAN'S HOMER, and we know that the quarry from which he hewed Hyperion is not yet exhausted. Of the thousands who will now listen for the first time to the story of Achilles, it may well be that some will kindle at what they hear. They will know how to thank Mr. BRYANT that those flames which blazed over TROY, leaping from headland to headland, have once more borne a message across the sea.

The volume which has lately appeared completes Mr. BRYANT'S version. In reviewing the first twelve books we submitted our theory of translation and expressed an opinion upon the merits of his work. We have now to make the same report. The translator has followed the text of his author with a scrupulous exactitude, which required unusual self-command from a poet of original powers. Yet he is often so truly and nobly poetical that many will overlook the perfection of his scholarship. Most countries of Western Europe have produced several translations of the Iliad. But one has eventually obscured the rest, and thenceforward kept unchallenged a niche in the national literature. Some such pre-eminence among English versions belongs, in our judgment, to Mr. BRYANT'S work. We propose to compare him—not with his English rivals, whom we hold him to have excelled—but with some of those translators who are most highly esteemed in other countries.

Few lines of the Iliad have been more frequently imitated than those which paint with the tints of Albano the girdle of Aphrodité. The incident which calls forth the description is well known. Determined to lull the vigilance of Zeus and secure her dazzling Greeks, Hera flies to the toilette. The most truthful of poets puts no garth in beauty unadorned, and himself performs the part of tirewoman. It occurs, however, to Hera that her lord is already familiar with the resources of her wardrobe, and the fear of meeting a cold or careless eye leads her to borrow of Aphrodité. She receives a talisman, but precisely what this was is—to guess, at least—a puzzle. It was an embroidered strap, so much is certain; but how used, and where? Belt or waist-girdle it was not—for that Hera had on. It was plainly a slender and dainty thing, or how could one hide it in her bosom? For our part, we believe it to have been a breast-band (brust-gürtel) worn just under the breasts to the end, as DAHN suggests, ut ejus superne prominentes quo feminæ species redderetur venustior et desiderabilior. A French commentator with much heat pronounces this view an insult to the figure of the goddess. He declares that this corsetlike band was nothing else than what ladies of our day sometimes call "a gage," and was employed to keep up the tunic a little above the knee. "Folle," he adds triumphantly, "pourquoi l'imagination y attacha-t-elle des déductions." The one translator commentant to decide so nice a question was Mme. DACIER. Unhappily she throws no light on it. Mr. BRYANT turns the passage thus:

"she spake, and from her bosom drew the zone
Embroidered, many-colored and instinct
With every winning charm—with love, desire,
Dalliance and gentle speech that stealthily
O'ercomes the purpose of the wisest mind."

We must object to zone. Mr. BRYANT has just given (Il. 14, v. 181) the same name to a broad heavily-fringed belt which Hera is now wearing. But HOMER marks a difference, calling that ζωστὴρ and this ἱμὰς. VOSS likewise is here somewhat careless, rendering both words by gürtel. Dalliance happily translates a stubborn word and projects the idea which lay at the root of παρφασίη. Let us turn to VOSS!

"Sprach und löste von Busen den wunderflechtenden gürtel
Bunt gestickt; dort waren die zauberreize versammelt,
Dort war schmachtende lieb' und sehnsucht dort das gedränge
Dort die schmeichelnde bitte die oft auch den weisen bethört."

How neatly wunder and sucht are compressed in bunt-gestickt! Wunderflechtenden is, of course, mere padding. Schmachtende, likewise, is superfluous. Neither can we altogether like "befool" for ἐξελάθοιτο νόοιο. Mr. BRYANT'S phrase is certainly more felicitous. Gedränge is perfect, and, perhaps, suggested "dalliance." On the whole, it must be conceded that VOSS flickers in these lines. When Mme. DACIER brought out her Iliad it was affirmed on all hands that HOMER could never in the nature of things be presented in French verse. From that verdict an appeal has from time to time been taken, but the decision has never been reversed. Mme. DACIER'S stiffness and the flippancy of LA MOTTE are indeed equally intolerable. We decidedly prefer to any metrical version in French the prose translations of BITAUBE and DUGAS MONTBEL. Both are in the strictest sense belles-lettres works, and are generally accurate and spirited. BITAUBE portrays the girdle thus: "En même temps elle détache sa ceinture riche d'une superbe broderie. Là se trouvent réunis les charmes les plus séduisants; là sont l'amour, les tendres desirs, les doux entretiens et ces accents persuasifs qui dérobent en secret le cœur du plus sage." There are some adjectives here for which HOMER is not responsible.

MONTI'S version is well known. It has been called the golden ring which links the Greek and Italian literatures, and is ranked by its admirers with CARO'S Æneid. Beside La Morte d'Ettore it appears a meritorious work. No doubt the climax of false taste was reached when CESAROTTI, who had executed a good translation in prose, proceeded to metamorphose the Iliad into a strange monster which he called the Death of Hector. We will not quote MONTI now, for in this place he is tame and redundant. Yet he has skillfully hit with fusellio a secondary meaning of ἀστραγάλος. The French have a word, hobit, but we have nothing in English which so happily expresses the coaxing of lovers. TASSO'S reproduction of these lines is exquisite. He is depicting Armida's girdle. It was fraught, he says, with

"Teneri sdegni e placide e tranquille
Sorrisi, parolette, e dolci stille
Di pianto e sospir tronchi, e molli baci."

After the short, swift strokes of HOMER this picture seems almost florid with concetti. But each poet meant to epitomize the charms he had beheld in life. The countrywomen of TASSO were skilled in lovers' sleights, whereas the simple virgins of Homeric times had never heard of the gai savoir. If we may trust BRAMTOME, who knew something of Italian ladies in that age, the dames of Sienna were competent to instruct Aphroditê herself in the arts of fascination.

The range of Homeric similes is not limited to the phenomena of sky, forest and ocean, to the familiar experiences of the forge, the vineyard and the chase. The lightning-play of fancy and memory and the emotions of the heart are submitted to the same scrutiny and portrayed with like felicity. "Rapid as thought" has become a commonplace in every European language, but the guise which the simile wears in HOMER is still novel and effective. Incensed at the trick which has been so cleverly executed, Zeus orders Hera back to Olympus. Then Mr. BRYANT:

"He spake, the white-armed goddess willingly
Obeyed him, and from Ida's summit flew
To high Olympus. As the thought of man
Flies rapidly when long the traveled far,
He thinks, here would I be, I would be there,
And flits from place to place."

Willingly is supported by VOSS willig, but has no correlative in the Greek. The context, moreover, shows that Hera left her husband in a pet, and her peevishness finds full vent when she reaches Olympus. Mr. BRYANT omits ἐφεσσαμένη. VOSS gives spähenden geists, deriving the adjective from σόος, by which, with BUTTMANN, he understands the pointed (not bitter) fir tree. But if SCHNEIDER be right, these words are equivalent to νόος ἐφεσσάμενος, in the lines first quoted. The root would then be looked for in ἐφέζω, and the latter phrase might find an analogue, though not an exact one, in our "close thinkers." These details are worthy of notice, for CHAPMAN, mistaking the primitive sense of this adjective, had utterly missed the point of the simile. The perversity of HOMER is ludicrous. He condenses HOMER after this fashion:

"This said, went Juno to Olympus high;
As when a man looks o'er an ample plain
To any distance quickly goes his eye."

VOSS and Mr. BRYANT are in this place so much alike that we will not collate the German, but give instead MONTI'S blank verse:

"Disse e la Diva dalle bianche braccia
Obbedente dall' Idea montagna
Al Olympo salì. Colla celeritate
Con che vola il pensier del viatore
Che scorse molte terre le riande
In suo segreto e dice, Io quella riva
Io quest' altra toccai."

Scorse and riande are certainly pictorial, and perhaps sufficiently close. We like, also, suo segreto for "close mind." Altogether the version is neat and animated, but less compact than Mr. BRYANT'S. Both are quite as faithful as the prose of BITAUBE or MONTBEL. The former writes "Il dit, et Junon sonnian mon époux s'élève des sommets d'Ida sur Olympe. Tel que la rapide essor de la pensée de l'homme lorsqu'ayant parcouru des pays d'une vaste étendue et se rappelant en un moment tous les objets qui l'ont frappé, il dit en lui-même J'étais ici, j'étais là." It will be observed that Mr. BRYANT'S "Here would I be, I would be there," reproduces the optative ἔοιν. So does the "Dorthin möcht ich und dort" of VOSS. An alternative reading is ἔον, which BITAUBE and MONTI have preferred. The verb, however, should then be in the third person—not the first, as they give it. The imperfect would impart to the thought a slightly different tinge, and make the traveler rather retrace the past in memory than revisit it in desire. If this reading be accepted, we might perhaps venture to present the passage in this form:

Thus he grumbled. And Hera the white-armed goddess obeyed him
Down from the summits of Ida speeding to lofty Olympus.
Even as darteth the mind of a man who wilhome has traveled
Up and down on the earth, in close thought pensive he ponders
—Here was he, say—now there!—still aiming in many a fancy
In the battle which ensues with the twentieth book indicates the action of the poem. Achilles now enters the field, and Mr. GLADSTONE has justly remarked that we see [illegible] to have heard of warlike warriors before. To frame his central figure, HOMER summons from Olympus the whole hierarchy of heaven. Amid thunder and earthquake, the gods are seen rallying to either side. No part of the Iliad is pitched in a loftier key. Nowhere is a translator more strongly impelled to put forth all his powers. We quote Mr. BRYANT:

"From above with terrible crash
Thundered the father of the blessed gods
And mortal men, while Neptune from below
Shook the great earth and lofty mountain peaks.
Then watery Ida's heights and very roots
The City of Troy and the Greek galleys quaked.
Then Pluto, ruler of the nether world,
Leaped from his throne in terror, lest the god
Who makes the earth to tremble, cleaving it
Above him, should lay bare to gods and men
His horrible abodes, the dismal haunts
Which even the gods abhor."

We ought not perhaps, to dislike the expansion of [illegible], for the epithets added are themselves hardly more than formulas. The next four lines exhibit Mr. BRYANT'S best work. Their vigor and elegance are not extraneous but wrought, with patient fingers, out of the text itself. "Leaped from his throne in terror" is a melancholy falling-off. This indifferent line must stand for three Greek verbs, which render, with startling accuracy, the staccato movement of fear. On the other hand, a single word, "dismal," develops the two-fold meaning of ἀιδωνεύς. We give from VOSS the three hexameters which depict the panic of Aïdoneus:

"Bang donn erschrak dort unten des nachtreiche Heros Aïdoneus
Behend aus seinem sitze von dem throne, und schrie laut, dass ihm von oben
Nicht die erd' aufriesse der landerschütterer Poseidon."

Nachtreich is not equal to nether world, but really, these lines are incomparable. Beside them even the prose of MONTBEL appears a little wide of the text: "Dans ses retraites souterraines le roi desombres Pluton frémit; épouvanté il s'élance de son trone, pousse un cri, de peur que le terrible Neptune entrouvrant la terre ne montre aux dieux et aux hommes ces demeures terribles en horreur même aux immortels." We are unable to speak without contempt of the "Morte d' Ettore," but it is right to state that CESAROTTIS' prose translation of this passage is, perhaps, the closest extant. MONTI'S verse will be found less literal, and why, we may ask, should the shout of the four-stricken King precede his bound? The inverted order would be true to nature, as well as HOMER.

"Tremonne
Pluto il re de sepolti e spaventato
Dal suo sito balzò in piede da' suoi troni
Tremendo non gli squarci la terrena
Volta sul capo il crollator Nettunno
Ed intromessa collaggiu la luce
Agli Dei non discopra ed ai mortali
Le sue squallide bolge, al guardo orrende
Anco del ciel."

HOMER says nothing of intromessa luce. The words are transferred from VIRGIL'S paraphrase—tripidentque luminis lumine Manes.

LONGINUS, in his treatise on the sublime, had quoted this passage, and BOILEAU, in a translation of that work, has reproduced it with considerable care. BOILEAU has condescended to defend HOMER, but it is plain that his own theory of translation was that accepted by his age. LA MOTTE has stated it in his Ode. He tells HOMER that he proposes—

"Sous un nouveau language Rajeunir ton antique ouvrage," and deeming the unconscious energy of his author un peu sauvage, he engages to regler son ivresse. By BOILEAU no restraint of the sort was needed. His Muse was too thoroughly the grande dame ever to forget herself, and even in Pythian convulsions maintained a measure of decorum. We shall find his version at once droll and impressive. It is, so to speak, a Greek myth treated by PAUL VERONESE.

"L'enfer s'émeut au bruit de Neptune en furie
Pluton sort de son trone, il pâlit, il s'écrie,
Il a peur que ce dieu dans cet affreux séjour
D'un coup de son trident ne fasse entre le jour
Et pour contes, ouvrant de la terre la cavernes
Ne fasse voir du Styx la rive désolée
Les desseres aux vivants cet empire odieux
Abhorré des mortels et craint même des dieux."

To us, no book of the Iliad is more delightful than the twenty-fourth. There are many scenes in which we would willingly linger, not alone for the tender pathos with which the poet has informed them, but also for the light they throw upon the social ethics of the later as well as primitive Greek world. The figure of Achilles, weeping through the long night the loss of his beloved Patroclus, is a type of that devoted friendship which illumines with a peculiar radiance the stream of Hellenic biography. In the constant warfare of sympathy and selfishness, friendship between man and man seems to have played something of the master-rôle which in modern times has been engrossed by the passion of love. Again, Helen, in her lament over Hector's corpse, lets fall some bitter words that deserve to be weighed in connection with the attitude which Menelaus maintains throughout the poem. They would assist us to understand her strangely-equivocal position, as well as the conception of the marriage relation which obtained in the Homeric age. We have space, however, but for a single extract. We will choose "Priam's Prayer to Achilles." How often and with what careful hand these lines have been reproduced in English is well known. In French there are no less than ten metrical versions, to say nothing of prose. To poets of every nation this passage has remained a bow of Odysseus, which many have been eager to grasp, but none, save VOSS, have hitherto had strew enough to bend. The circumstances under which the prayer is made are inexpressively affecting. The fate of Troy has at length compelled the combat of Hector and Achilles. From the walls of the city Priam has beheld its fatal issue. The prop and pride of his old age, the bulwark of his kingdom lies dead and dishonored in the hostile camp. Conducted by Hermes, Priam passes the sentinels and gains the quarters of Achilles. He enters, springs toward Peleïdes, clasps his knees, and kisses those "slaughter-dealing hands" which had slain so many of his sons.

Then.—Mr. BRYANT:

"Think of thy father, an old man like me
God'like Achilles! on the dreary verge
Of closing life he stands, and even now
Haply is fiercely pressed by those who dwell
Around him, and has none to shield his age
From war and its disasters. Yet his heart
Rejoices when he hears thou yet dost live,
And every day he hopes that his dear son
Will come again from Troy. My lot is hard
For I was father of the bravest sons
In all wide Troy, and none are left me now.

and suffrage, or in degraded women, for the very good reason stated by SYDNEY SMITH long ago. As that keen observer said, "There always has been and always will be a class of men in the world so exceedingly small that if women were educated there would be nothing left below them." COMMUNICATIONS.

Country Board—The Independence of Servants.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A letter from "Cincinnatus," of Litchfield, Conn., in your issue of this day, assigns as a reason for the neglect Summer boarders receive at the hands of those they contract with for accommodation, that farmers are "too independent to wait on city people, not needing their money bad enough," &c., &c. As he has evidently had some experience in this line allow me to suggest that a man is never independent in a commercial transaction—he must give value for value. I notice when our country friends come to town they are very scrupulous and exact in their dealings, not to say close, and are very careful to get their money's worth. There is no favor expected on either side, in boarding in the country, beyond the usual courtesies of civilized life, but these are apt to be strained past observance when one is furnished with third-rate fare and no-rate cooking in return for first-class pay. Let not the shoe-maker go beyond his last; in other words parties should be sure, when they make an arrangement to furnish reasonably good board or anything else, that they are able to carry it out.

The German Steam-ship Companies.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your remarks in this morning's issue, that the time of the steamers of the "Williams & Guion, and of the German Companies, with but one or two exceptions, has been unquestionably slow," are certainly true, so far as regards the former line, and the mercantile community have often had good reason to complain about their time in delivering the mails. You do injustice, however, to the German lines. Their regular mail boats, leaving here on Tuesdays and Saturdays, are making as fast time as any steamers ever made, the fastest English and French boats not excepted, and no complaint have been made about their delivery of the mails.

A GERMAN.

NO. 15 MAIDEN-LANE, Thursday, June 16, 1870.

Card from the Mayor's Office.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The Mayor requests me to state in reply to an item in Saturday's TIMES, which charges a policeman with brutality in killing a dog near the City Hall, that he has made proper inquiry into the matter, and is certain the reporter was misinformed. If the facts of the article were correct the strictures of the TIMES were just. But upon authority of Sergt. COOPER, (of the City Hall Precinct,) who saw the occurrence, the simple facts appear that the dog had snapped at some children in the Park, and his actions alarmed the owner, who requested Patrolman BEAMENDERFOR to kill the animal. Sergt. COOPER asserts that the cries of the dog were uttered before the striking of the one blow that killed him.

Very truly yours, J. C. GOLDSMITH,
Sten. Secretary.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, June 18, 1870.

Bathetic.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Nothing is easier than to throw ridicule upon any book, particularly if the reviewer does not hesitate to use coarse abuse, or to make intellectual allusions which are only too well understood by many of his readers. Such a style of composition is that of the reviewer who criticises the late novel of Mr. DISRAELI in the pages of Blackwood's Magazine; and, whatever may be thought of Lothair as a literary production, the review of that work contained in the magazine to which allusion has just been made, will certainly be regretted by every right-minded person who shall peruse it. As for the gross personal allusions and the blasphemous sentences contained in the article, these are beneath contempt.

NOT A CRITIC.

White Slavery.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I see the Sun has a plea for the women, under head of "White Slavery." I wish every paper in the country would take up the cry. Nothing can be much more barbarous than to make women and young girls stand all day. From their physical organization it is the height of cruelty. They are subject to all sorts of ailments and diseases that are aggravated by standing, and there are times when the agony and distress of body would be by men unbearable. You editors, being of the opposite sex, cannot know the suffering that is endured, under penalty of starvation, entailing disorders, where the person might otherwise be healthy, and occasioning the most disastrous results to young girls.

Carriage Accident in Central Park—Miraculous Escape of Two Ladies.

Mrs. ROBERTSON, a young English lady, recently arrived in America, and at present residing on Staten Island, while driving her sister, Miss ADELAIDE HAYTER, in a light carriage, drawn by a pair of young Canadian horses, in Central Park, yesterday afternoon, was run into by a buggy steered by some blundering John, and her horse, becoming unmanageable, ran away at full speed. The lady, who is well known in her own country as a fearless horsewoman and an accomplished whip, held on to the lines, "roping" her fiery and unmanageable team with indomitable pluck and coolness; but in rounding a sharp corner the pole snapped, and the carriage, by the momentum, thrusting its fair occupants to the ground with considerable violence. Beyond a few bruises and scratches, however, both the ladies escaped serious injury. The lady's husband, accompanied by another gentleman, heard of what was going on, and arrived on the scene of the accident in time to witness, but not to prevent, the catastrophe, and to assist in procuring another carriage to convey the ladies home. The team, valued at from $1,500 to $2,000, sustained serious damage. The cause of all the mischief remained to get away before his identity and address could be ascertained.

The New-Jersey West Line Railroad—The Directors Charged with a Misapplication Fraud—A Lawsuit in Prospect.

The inhabitants of the townships situated on the line of the New-Jersey West Line Railway (formerly known as the Passaic Valley and Pompton Railroad) are just now in a state of considerable excitement over the action of the directors in mortgaging their franchises and property for $3,000,000. A meeting of the citizens and farmers near New-Bruntswick, like, had recently held, and threats of contest against the action of the Company, and to take measures to secure the agreement which it is said was originally entered into by the Company when the townships were first induced to aid the construction. This road, like the greater part of the roads now building in New-Jersey, was located to pass through certain townships upon the agreement of the citizens to have bonds for the purpose of raising money to aid the Company's stock. Liberal subscriptions were obtained, but after the bargain was made the Company mortgaged their property, for $3,000,000, giving first mortgage bonds. It is claimed by the farmers that, according to the agreement under which they invested in the stock of the road, the township subscriptions were to stand in the nature of a first lien upon the road, and they now demand that the amount of their subscriptions be taken in the first mortgage bonds, instead of the Company's stock. The Company has taken counsel and the business promises to keep the courts busy for some time. The bonding law does not make the directors liable for whole the amount owned, and it is doubtful if the necessary decree can be obtained from the Courts.

Mr. John H. LYON, the well-known President of the Company, has resigned, and Ex-Senator ANTHONY has been appointed in his place.

Widening Broadway.

As already stated in the TIMES, the Public Park Commissioners intend to widen Broadway, between Chambers-street and Barclay, by adding to the carriage-way the present sidewalk running on the west side of the City Hall Park. This will make an addition of nearly seventeen feet to the carriage-way, and will certainly be a much-needed and most gladdening target thereto. A sidewalk will be constructed in the Park within the line of the old railing, which is now being removed. The improvement, however, cannot be carried far until the officials in charge of the new Post-office building set back their fence to the line first designated. At present this fence encroaches to the extent of seventy feet in the Park. Full suitable ones the sidewalk on the east side of the Park will also eventually be added to the roadway on that side. It would seem, indeed, as if this were even a more needed improvement than the widening of Broadway, for, at times, the sidewalk on Park-row is, at certain times of the day, absolutely dangerous to pedestrians, in consequence of the cars being allowed to run so near to the curb-stone.

First Baptist Church Sunday-School Anniversary.

The thirty-eighth anniversary of the Sunday-school of the First Baptist Church, corner of Thirty-ninth-street and Park-avenue, took place last evening. At the morning service a sermon was preached by the pastor, J. D. ANDERSON, D. D., who read his text from a Bible which, 115 years ago, had been used in the first church then located in Hester and Cart, now known as Gold-street. The services in the afternoon were held in the lecture or Sunday-school room, up stairs, the air of which was filled with the sweet perfumes of innumerable baskets of rich flowers, after a word of welcome from the Pastor, Rev. J. HYATT SMITH, repeated his familiar and fervent service, known as the "snow-ball" sermon. He was followed by Rev. A. D. GILLETT, Rev. J. L. HART, of the Methodist Church, and several others in appropriate and interesting addresses. In the evening there was a large reunion of former Superintendents, teachers, scholars and their friends. The exercises consisted of prayer, singing and addresses by many of the old laborers in the school. Mr. CONROY, Mr. CLARKE, Mr. TAYLOR and several others connected with the school in its earlier years, repeated many reminiscences connected with its origin and growth, at much interest to those present. The attendance was very large and the exercises unusually interesting.

Before Judges Sutherland, Monell and Sedgwick.

TRANSFER OF BILLS OF LADING.

James Bichet & Co. vs. The Empire Transportation Company.—It appears in this case that the plaintiffs had bought a bill of lading from the shippers of certain goods on the defendants' line. When the merchandise reached its destination, the bill of lading was not produced and the goods were delivered to the person who first presented a receipt to deliver the goods on the ground that the bill of lading contained a clause providing that property shipped under it should be delivered to the person who should first show the receipt and consignee. Plaintiffs resort to this defense, upon the ground that the shipper had not indorsed the bill of lading, and it was thus in the hands of the consignee, who had bought it from the carrier. The plaintiffs contend that the bill of lading must be construed according to the laws of Pennsylvania, and upon the theory that the same rule which obtains in the State of Pennsylvania, the carrier's liability should cease when, they quote the Pennsylvania decisions to show, the bill of lading should be transferred in larger letters than the body of the instrument, further stating that in Pennsylvania, the principles which govern the Courts in construing the effect of the shipper, in a manner limiting the carrier's liability from the mere fact of the shipper's omission to indorse the bill of lading, are wholly inapplicable to the case, as the operation of the Pennsylvania Carrier's liability is an essential part of everybill of lading, and that the goods are transported, "subject to the conditions and liabilities of the Pennsylvania Railroad." But a clause restricting the carrier's liability is not a material part of every bill of lading, and, in the present case, it is clear from the evidence, transaction of shipments on the contrary, it is a matter of indifference to the shipper, and it is clear that a right of lien will be lost upon surrender of the bill of lading, and, in the case of the carrier, a liability is an essential part of everybill of lading, and, in the present case, it is clear that the carrier's liability is not material, but is a matter of indifference to the shipper, which is

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on Saturday, the session was mainly taken up in further consideration of the Post-office Appropriation bill, particularly the amendments proposing abolition of the franking privilege. Various amendments were offered, and the principal one rejected by a vote of 20 to 16. The bill was finally reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate, and efforts made to get a direct vote on the franking question. The amendment of Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, was at length voted on as a test, and was rejected—yeas 21, nays 26. The bill was not finally disposed of however. During the morning hour considerable routine business was transacted, and several bills discussed, providing for additional grants of public lands for various railway enterprises. Mr. CONKLING reported from the Judiciary Committee a substitute for the House Naturalization bill, which is the Senate bill recently reported, with another section added, providing for the appointment in all cities of 50,000 inhabitants of an indefinite number of special deputies, to be selected by the United States Marshal, for the purpose of preserving order at elections when representatives are to be chosen. The Senate did not adjourn until nearly 5 o'clock.

In the House the session was mainly devoted to reports from the Committee on Claims, according to previous arrangement, and a number of private claims were disposed of. The credentials of Mr. WHITTEMORE, member elect from South Carolina, were presented, but objection having been made to their acceptance, after some debate action upon them was postponed until Tuesday next; immediately after the morning hour. The Senate joint resolution, providing for the appointment of a Naval Board to examine the cases of officers who deem themselves aggrieved in being passed over in the line of promotion, was passed; also a bill fixing the boundaries of East and West Virginia. The House, at 4 P. M., adjourned.

GENERAL.

Advices from New-Mexico, received at Washington, announce the death of Lieut. DREW of the army, and the officer in charge of Apache Indians. He, in company with fifteen men, while in pursuit of some Indians who had run off a lot of cattle belonging to a train, was lost in the mountains. Before he was found he had become so weak from the want of nourishment that he died soon after.

On the morning of the 5th inst. a fire broke out in Panama, which burned from 1½ A. M. till 11 A. M. It originated in the Aspinwall Hotel, and spread to other buildings along the Juan de Dios street, destroying the Bank of Panama. Families lost their residences and removed their furniture to the plaza, and great excitement and alarm extend during the progress of the fire. Many casualties occurred, and twelve lives were known to have been lost. It was feared that many persons were buried beneath the ruins of the Aspinwall Hotel.

Late advices from Fort Hays, Kansas, received at St. Louis, are to the effect that the Indians between Camp Supply and Bear Creek are on the war-path. A number of Government trains have been attacked, but the Indians have thus far been driven off. It is no longer safe, it is reported, for trains or herds to travel without an escort.

The explanation of the non-arrival of the steam-ship Henry Chauncey, from Aspinwall, is to be found in the fact that she broke a shaft when a day out, and put back at once.

The recent heavy verdict against the Central Railroad Company, in the Supreme Court of Erie County, for exacting illegal fares between Buffalo and Tonawanda, has, it is said, had the effect of inducing a number of persons to make the trip between the same points for the purpose of bringing similar suits for damages.

In the suit of NEWTON SIEBERT and wife vs. JOHN LEESON, for assault, tried in Baltimore on Friday, the plaintiffs obtained a verdict of $9,000. The assault consisted in LEESON's having kissed the hand of SIEBERT's wife, against her will, during her husband's absence from home.

A female prisoner, by name MOLLIE RAY, confined for drunkenness in the Baltimore City Jail, was killed, on Saturday morning, by jumping from the second tier of the prison.

A colored man, named JAMES LEWIS, was stabbed with a butcher-knife and killed, at the Baltimore Center Market, Saturday morning, by a boy named CHARLES ROSS. The man's offense consisted in having refused to assist Ross to place some meat in a wagon. The murderer escaped, and has not yet been arrested.

A San Francisco dispatch says a train of several wagons and twenty men, near Camp Grant, Arizona, was attacked by Indians, May 27, and one man killed, several wounded and the rest dispersed to the mountains, where, it is thought, they have perished. The Indians burned the wagons.

The German Saengerbund held a meeting in Cincinnati on Saturday, at which some alterations were made in the constitution of the organization. The Saengerbund will be held hereafter every two years. Competitive singing is specially provided for. A commission was appointed to examine the cases of the delinquent societies that go out under the previous action of the Bund.

The Secretary of the Treasury has issued a circular in relation to inshore fishing in Canadian waters, notifying masters of fishing vessels of the discontinuance of the license system by the Canadian authorities, and of the limits within which by treaty stipulations American fishermen may take fish. The circular gives the provisions of the Canadian laws on this subject, and explains the effect of the change of boundary between Canada and Labrador.

The railroad depot at Sidney, Nebraska, was burned on Saturday evening, the fire originating from sparks from an engine.

Inflation as a Measure of Relief.

If Mr. GARFIELD's Currency bill is to become law, at least there should no mistake in regard to its tendency as a measure of inflation, and the pretext on which this policy is to rest. The desirableness of redistributing some portion of the National Bank currency is more apparent than its necessity. The laws of finance might be relied upon in the long-run to adjust with tolerable fairness the proportions of paper money in circulation in different localities. But there is an appearance of reason in the complaint that the pro rata basis of the original National Banking scheme has been departed from, and in the demand that the restoration of the South and the growth of Territories of the West should be followed by a revision of the scale. It is always well to avoid even the appearance of injustice. And establishing something like theoretical equity, so far as the apportionment of the present amount of banking capital is concerned, the bill tends to obviate sectional discontent.

But the pretense by which it is sought to justify an addition of fifty millions to the amount of outstanding currency will not endure investigation. The West and South need more currency, we are told, and only by expansion can it be obtained. With more paper money, the wiseacres proceed to argue, these portions of the country will experience an increase of prosperity. Both propositions are untenable. A legitimate exchange of commodities will give the Western farmer or the Southern cotton-grower all the currency he is entitled to. Money will flow from the East into the pockets of both just so soon as they have something to sell for which there is a market. Water will not more surely find its level than will money—unless, in either case, artificial methods be employed to check that which naturally is inevitable.

The great want of the day is not more money, but increased confidence. The monetary centers are literally glutted. The amount awaiting investments has rarely been larger. It is unfortunate that this plethora of money exists simultaneously with an unwillingness to embark in many enterprises, and with a depression in business and industry which makes the demand for legitimate loans comparatively small. Evidently this state of things cannot be improved by the creation of more currency. The effect of that will be to foster speculation in gold and stocks, to produce a fresh disturbance of values, and generally to make matters worse instead of better. The lack of confidence will be greater than even now, because there will be less faith in the wisdom of Congress, and less hope of the resumption of specie payments. The West and South may indeed experience a momentary stimulus, but the reaction that will follow will be sure and disastrous.

The Naturalization Problem.

The movement in Congress to amend our naturalization system, so that it shall no longer be improperly used by corrupt politicians, has proved a lamentable failure. The vote in the House on the bill as originally reported showed that most of the members were controlled by political apprehension rather than by sincere conviction on the merits of the question, and that they dared not do what they really desired for fear that the class who were to be affected would construe the act into one of hostility, and resent it accordingly. The bill which was subsequently passed really amounts to very little compared with the object originally sought to be accomplished.

The fact that the action of Congress was shaped in opposition to the general conviction of its most intelligent members, as well as to the wishes of the best portion of the people, is full of significance. It shows that there is an element of mischief and possibly of grave danger, underlying the future solution of the problem of citizenship by naturalization. In many parts of the country the political conduct of affairs is even now under the absolute control of the foreign-born citizens and their immediate descendants; and at times when political parties are evenly divided, that element, under the manipulation of demagogues, holds the balance of power, and may easily be used to control State and even national elections. For instance, we know that the present executive officers of the State of New-York hold their positions by the suffrages—legal and fraudulent—of the foreign element in this City; and it is not difficult to conceive of a President of the United States being elected by a similar combination.

We do not allude to these facts in any spirit of prejudice toward naturalized citizens, or with the purpose of advocating any material restriction of the franchise of immigrants from other countries. We desire only to point out the dangerous antagonism which may be created, and the great misconception which already travails among our adopted citizens. On principle, we would concede full political privileges to all comers, after a proper term of residence here, and we would exact but one condition upon which it is to be granted, namely, absolute good faith in the renunciation of previous allegiance. It is the obstinate clinging to old nationalities which constitutes the great evil of the present system in its practical working. The idea of the founders of our Government was that all incongruous political convictions and obligations should be merged in American citizenship, and that every citizen should be loyal to the established principles of our Government.

That we have fallen very far short of a practical realization of that idea is painfully apparent. There is, generally, a great lack of true appreciation of the obligations of American citizenship on the part of those who have accepted it by virtue of naturalization. The fact that all are citizens alike is ignored, and we find foreign political questions constantly forced into our domestic politics.

The worst result which experience has shown to have followed in the train of this rule is the selfish and corrupt use which is made of it by demagogues. The massing of the naturalized vote by nationalities gives corrupt politicians an opportunity of influencing it through its leaders, or appealing to the prejudices and interests of the foreign-born population, and of controlling their votes so effectively as to make them dreaded and consequently courted by improper means. Legislation is influenced and controlled, as was the case with the Naturalization bill just defeated in Congress—and a feeling of exasperation is naturally aroused in the minds of the native-born citizen. The evil becomes more and more serious, and how to remedy it is one of the grave political problems of the time.

Is Canada to be Independent?

The Fenians have not "invaded" Canada altogether in vain. They have created a discussion in reference to the anomalous relation now held by the Dominion to the parent country—and a change in the relationship will probably be the result.

The circumstances in which the discussion originates invest it with a significance not heretofore possessed by movements for independence or annexation on the part of Canadians. These have invariably grown out of some local and temporary difficulty, commercial depression, or the partisan exigencies of disappointed politicians. They have been failures because spasmodic in their character, involving no general sense of difficulty or wrong, and in no respect appealing to the feeling or judgment of the main body of the people. The case is different now. England is withdrawing her troops from Canada, avowedly on the ground that the Dominion must hereafter provide for its own defense. Yet the Dominion is perpetually menaced as a part of the British Empire. Its people find themselves called upon to incur large expenditures, and to mature military plans utterly at variance with its material prosperity, on account of a connection which confers no corresponding advantage. The Dominion has no quarrels of its own that it should construct a costly military system. Its external difficulties, whatever they may be, result wholly from the fact that it is still under the British flag,—the British Government—meanwhile insisting that the British people shall be no longer taxed for the protection of colonies which add nothing to the strength or prosperity of the Empire. The Canadians therefore grumble, as naturally they may, and they call for satisfaction, which they are not likely to obtain.

It must be admitted that much may be said on either side. The Canadians have clung like barnacles much too long to the British ship. When England adopted free-trade as her commercial policy, the revision of her colonial system became a necessity, and the severance from many colonies only a matter of time. With regard to Canada, the most thoughtful of England's public men, and the most influential of her journals, have for years suggested to the Canadian people the desirableness of starting in the world on their own account. They have hinted, counseled,—done almost everything but cut the slender cord that holds colony and parent State together. A high-spirited people would have taken these hints long ago. Finally, finding ordinary persuasion insufficient, the British Government does justice to its own tax-payers by withdrawing its soldiers, and leaving the Canadians to defend themselves.

And now the Canadians, awakened as from a pleasant dream, half in fright, half in indignation, wonder what England means! They have sent across the sea a member of their Cabinet to put the question plainly and to bring back a plain answer. Their newspapers are speaking with unwonted emphasis. "Either England must assume the defense of the Provinces or the Provinces must be no longer encumbered with England's quarrels." This is the substance of the song which is sung with many variations by journals of all hues. The French Press of Lower Canada is foremost in the discussion, as invariably, it is when topics involving broad principles are involved. But it is no longer the French Canadian Radical who speaks. The Minerve, of Montreal, the organ of the more conservative section, of which Sir GEORGE CARTIER, the Minister of Militia, is the head, swells the chorus with its voice. Not less notable is the avowal in favor of independence to which the Journal de Quebec has given utterance. The Journal is the organ of the authorities of the Catholic Church in Quebec, and is edited by Mr. JOSEPH CAUCHON, Speaker of the Dominion Senate, a writer of great ability, and a politician of much influence. Of the newspapers printed in the English language, both in Quebec and Ontario, the number now committed to the independence policy is large and constantly increasing. Some of these are indicated by the London Free Press, in an article which we print elsewhere.

The progress of the agitation will be watched from this side of the line with an interest which will grow when the probable results of Canadian independence shall be more carefully considered by the people. It is more than likely that the map of the northern portion of the continent will undergo material changes before the close of the next decade.

The Latest Veto.

The refusal of Gov. HOFFMAN to sanction the bill in relation to foreign insurance companies, which passed the Legislature at its late session, will be approved by all enemies of monopoly, and by that large and important class to whom adequate facilities for fire insurance are a business necessity. Of the unjust provisions of the bill we have spoken more than once. So far as it may have been intended to exact substantial guarantees from foreign corporations undertaking risks in this State, the purpose of the measure was unobjectionable. Had its promoters contented themselves with subjecting these corporations only to the restrictions and requirements to which our own companies are liable, it would have become law unchallenged. But under the pretence of establishing an equality of guarantees they contrived to discriminate most unfairly against foreign companies. Under the plea of protecting the public they laid down conditions which would have deprived the public of the competition in fire insurance which is so productive of benefit. In a word, instead of securing safety in competition, as between home and foreign companies, the bill would have created a monopoly.

The Governor has not come to his decision hastily. He has heard what the home underwriters were able to offer in support of the measure, and has also allowed the Insurance Superintendent to appear as an advocate in its behalf. His own appreciation of what is just and reasonable has enabled him to detect the falsity of some of their allegations and the unreasonableness of others. They asked him to sustain the bill now, with an understanding that its defects should be remedied next session. He has chosen to veto what is bad and to leave more equitable legislation on the subject to another day. In thus deciding he has rendered the community good service.

Cottages by the Sea.

The charms of privacy are no doubt best appreciated in a community which has arrived at a certain stage in civilization. Of course there are incidents, such as those of climate and occupation, that modify the taste for these delights. In the wet and gloomy climate of England, people retire in families to their own snug and jealously-guarded firesides. In more genial France they gather in crowds in the public squares and gardens. Gregariousness is greatly influenced by the state of the atmosphere, and exclusiveness, like ice, melts away in proportion to the amount of sunshine. The Greeks of various degrees met in places of common resort, on the most familiar footing, and, as we gather from the fragments of their literature still left to us, the loftiest among them were frequently "chaffed" by the most obscure, in a manner that nowadays is unheard of. Such a usage was obviously one fruit of a delicious climate, which was always tempting people to walk abroad and to exchange the quiet and, perhaps, the ease of the domestic hearth for the gayety and reparte of the public walks. Other things being equal, however, society as it becomes more refined looks in private homes for greater seclusion. The instinct to govern one's family in one's own way, to educate children and train servants not by other people's rule, but by their own, is strong with most men, and as they read and think more and grow richer, this instinct grows stronger. That it is asserting itself with increasing vigor in the United States, is shown from year to year in various ways, and quite noticeably in the aspect of the watering-places. The huge hotels, formerly accounted by foreign travelers to be characteristic of America, still exist, in most places by sea-shore and hill-side, are huge than ever, and find no lack of patrons; but increasing in number much faster than they, and in sharper request with each season, are the small houses and villas that spring up like mushrooms near them, and the demand for which is a proof of the accuracy of our statement. The rush, the jostle, the heat and the noise of the great caravansaries are found disagreeable now by a hundred where a score of years ago they would not have been thought so by ten. Saratoga and the other inland resorts are yearly getting better supplied with moderate sized dwellings that may be rented by the season; and in Newport and Long Branch may now be discovered of almost all conceivable shapes and sizes that luxury once so rare, "a cottage by the sea."

We took occasion some time ago to point out the desirability of these innovations, and rejoice in their appearance. The repose and building up that sojourners at watering-places are presumed to seek, and which many of them doubtless need, are certainly more likely to be attained in a dwelling inhabited by few than by many, in a private house rather than in a public one, in a cottage rather than in a hotel. That social variety and a wholesome joyousness are most likely to spring from numbers, is patent enough. But there is a time for all things, including a time to seek company and a time to be alone. It is always possible for the tenants of watering-place cottages to seek the society of the hotels, and the privilege of choice is of itself a source of enjoyment. After a season spent amid the uproar and elbowing of the town, the opportunity to be alone with nature, or to enjoy her beauties in company with congenial friends, must surely to delicate minds be more refreshing than the bustle and attrition which at watering-place hotels only change the form of our surroundings and not their substance. The calm which alone enables a human soul, so to speak, to reconstruct itself, to recover from the moil and worry of a life that for most of us seems constantly to grow more exacting and more exciting, can surely be best enjoyed in private, even if attainable at all in the monster inns. But, as we formerly suggested, much of this desirable seclusion is to be had even in an humbler and more convenient way than by hiring a house, however small. For the seaside especially we believe in the comfort and general desirability of furnished lodgings. Such accommodations can be readily arranged to suit all purses and tastes, need be in no wise foreign to our manners and customs, and are immeasurably superior to second-rate hotels. Ramsgate and Boulogne, Brighton and Nice, Biarritz and Hastings, supply models of all types for these comfortable modes of living, and we hope before many days to see them—as most European things usually are—well improved upon in all respects at each of our fashionable Summer resorts.

Plans of the Indian Commission.

In spite of all the discussions upon the Indian question, no definite plan has hitherto been suggested which seemed likely to meet all the difficulties of the case. The advocates of gentle treatment of the red men are agreed that the injustice of which they complain is unquestionable. Their lands have been seized by settlers, and in pursuance of various corporate enterprises; treaty obligations were too often disregarded, and frequently contact with white men has only resulted in a demoralization which is worse than that incidental to a "savage" nature and mode of life. For what they are now suffering the white race is, therefore, for the most part responsible. There seems no clearer duty, both in a political and Christian sense, than that of settling the Indian problem upon a basis of justice, good faith and kindly feeling.

Some time ago the United States Indian Commission was directed by Mr. Commissioner COX to submit a plan for a wiser and more humane treatment of the Indians within our borders. That body was well qualified for the task. It had examined the records of the Indian Bureau for ten years past; various members of the Commission had personally visited the tribes, two had resided among them nearly a lifetime, and one for three years, and, as is well known, the whole Commission was selected with especial reference to the highest character and social standing of the members. The plan which is now submitted to Congress by it recognizes distinctly the important principle that the advancement of the white man need not be ruinous to the Indians, and that "no material advantage to the white based on moral wrong can be a real gain." In this spirit a series of propositions are offered which are of a most practical character and entirely just.

The plan first of all suggests that the most important preliminary step which Congress should undertake is the passage of laws by which the fulfillment of existing treaties shall be enforced both in letter and spirit. It is easy to see how, if this advice be accepted and acted upon, the complaints of bad faith, which the Indians have justly made, will be no longer probable. The Indian tribes west and north of the Mississippi, the Commission thinks, ought to be concentrated into not less than four nor more than seven distinct reservations, and the tribes should be induced to sell their present lands at a fair price with that view. Part of the purchase money may be devoted to acquiring the new reservations, part to the erection of suitable buildings thereon, and the remainder to expenditures for the benefit of the future occupants during the next twenty years. The first division of land should be eighty acres per capita, which would be sufficient to provide for the support of all.

Article 12 of the plan contains another judicious provision—that no white man, other than such as may be authorized or employed by the Government, shall locate upon any of the reservations, and even these shall be married and have their wives with them during residence therein. Moreover, those whom the Government shall authorize to go upon the reservations, to benefit the Indians, shall be selected because of their well-attested Christian proclivities, and without reference to their political or religious creeds. In addition to this, persons only of the simplest callings are to be admitted, and in certain defined numbers proportionate to the Indian population. No intoxicating liquors, except for medicinal purposes, are to be allowed, and these shall be dispensed only under medical and Government control. One of the sources of trouble and discontent has arisen from the misrepresentations of half-breed interpreters, who have defended the Indians with false promises which the Government has never made. This is to be prevented, and only honest, truthful and responsible men, who have learned the language of the nation they live among, are to be for the future employed. This reform will have a most beneficial effect: the forcible statement of RED CLOUD that his words were filtered and altered for the worse in transmission, illustrates how great is the evil which it proposes to obviate. One other provision is all that we can find space to mention at present. It is that the members of the various classes employed in the Indian service call conventions in each State, of persons interested in the plan, to elect representatives to a general convention at Washington. The duty of the latter will be to select such married men as shall be placed upon the reservations. The scheme contains many more details, the adoption of which will tend to solve the Indian problem, if they are faithfully carried into execution; and it is to be hoped that Congress will lose no time in giving the whole a fair and speedy trial.

The Coal Monopoly.

It will be a great mistake on the part of Congress if that body shall allow the present coal monopoly to continue until another session, and we cannot but deem it a serious danger to the Republican Party. The demand has been made all over the country that the price of coal should be reduced. We have shown that the monopoly given to a few coal producers, by independence of foreign supply, has had the effect of inducing the strikes and constant demand for increased wages which result in increased expenditure and diminished production. We do not know of a single class of people who derive benefit from the high prices for coal except the coal monopolists themselves, and even their profits are not proportionate to the heavy loss their monopoly entails upon the people.

It is worthy of notice that the most earnest petitioners for the protection of their own manufactures are equally earnest in their desire to have the raw material they use made as free as possible. Each manufacturer naturally wishes to be able to supply his fabric as cheaply as possible. We find that the manufacturer of pig-iron is anxious to get cheap ore, and that a movement which should admit Canadian ore at a cheaper rate than our own can be produced would be extremely popular with them. Their own product in turn becomes a burden to all who have to use it as material, because of the increased price at which it is made. And thus, in the ascending scale, taxation upon everything which enters as material into manufactures is oppressive to those who use it.

The very worst of all these monopolies, we do not hesitate to say, is that of coal. Unlike the other necessaries of life, it is in the hands of a few producers. These can easily combine to keep up the price. Even if a stoppage of the production is necessary for this purpose, it can be done with comparative ease. A fictitious strike is organized—men are paid by the coal-owners without work, in order to prevent a fall of prices, and the consumer is in the end obliged to pay for the support of large classes through periods of idleness. Through these combinations the prices are made very greatly to exceed the cost of production, but still the importer of the foreign article does not dare to enter into competition, because if he should be seduced by the high prices and attempt it, the monopolists could without loss—merely by a temporary sacrifice of a part of their profits—throw their coal into the market at a rate ruinous to him.

There is not a single point of view in which monopoly in coal cannot be shown to be one of the deadliest curses which can be inflicted upon a nation, and we trust that Congress will forward the good work which it seems to have inaugurated by repealing all duties on coal.

The Constitutional Convention of Vermont has performed two notable acts. It has decided against the proposed amendment of the Constitution granting women the suffrage by a nearly unanimous vote, and it has by a vote of 124 to 86 decided to abolish the Council of Censors, an institution peculiar to the State, and which has been in existence for the last fifteen years. The most singular thing connected with the abolition of the Council is that the recommendation therefor came from the Censors themselves, as was required by the Constitution. That body may truly be said, therefore, to have committed suicide. Most of the leading papers in the State make the matter one of congratulation, and seem to be agreed that the people are well rid of a cumbrous, useless and expensive feature of the Local Government.

It has been supposed that the Pennsylvania deposits of anthracite were inexhaustible, and that the production was capable of being increased to any desired extent. A Philadelphia paper, which is considered good authority in all matters relating to coal, says that the present supply cannot be materially increased with the present processes of mining, which have been confined to the surface veins. It estimates that the process of mining hitherto has been wasteful to such an extent that for every ton actually consumed another ten has been destroyed in the working or transportation. This is probably an extravagant estimate, but there is no doubt that it contains a deal of truth. In order to increase the production to answer the growing demand, it is said that deep mining will have to be resorted to—and that will materially affect the price.

Our Government, it appears, has a miniature war on hand. The announcement comes from Germany, that in concert with Great Britain and the North German Confederation, we are to make common cause against the Chinese pirates. The statement referred to speaks somewhat grandiloquently about "the fleets of the three powers," and "a general plan of operations," but it may, we presume, be taken for granted that the contest will make no very perceptible inroads in the war expenditure of the countries engaged. The service to commerce and civilization will, however, be considerable, and as nothing short of extirpation is in contest the allies, we may hope, that the remedy will be final. The Chinese Government "is to be permitted, if it pleases," to take part in the hostilities.

The system of competitive examinations for the civil service continues to make way in England. Beginning with the civil service of India, it has steadily extended into almost every department of British Government employment. It has not yet invaded the diplomatic ranks, and some of the higher positions of both the Home and Foreign Office are still closed to the graduate from the ranks of the people. By cable telegram it is announced that the Home Department is now prepared to adopt it unreservedly. When efficiency has gained almost its last victory over aristocratic prescription in England, it is almost time that we began to remove our unconstitutional appointments beyond the range of political influence, and to make well-tried tests the sole qualification for public employment.

Our Commissioners of Police seem to be giving earnest attention to the affairs of their Department, and especially to the conduct of the force. Complaints against policemen are listened to and investigated, and whenever the facts warrant punishment, it is promptly visited upon delinquents. The result cannot fail to be salutary to discipline and efficiency. This right supervision should not be neglected, for the efficiency of the service depends largely upon the consciousness on the part of policemen that shortcomings in the discharge of their duty will entail certain and speedy penalties.

The North German papers are jubilant over the happy results of the three years' labors which have just terminated of the first Reichstag of the Confederation. A very important step in the unification of Germany has been made by the enactment of a uniform criminal code for the various States. Hitherto the criminality of various acts has been differently estimated, according to the locality of their commission, and as many as fourteen different grades of crime were usually considered capital offenses. Now, Germany has what CHARLES V. attempted to give her, one penal law in all her northern provinces, and the cases to which capital punishment is applicable are limited to two. The Liberals in the Reichstag made a strong stand for the total abolition of the punishment of death, but taking warning by the experience of '49, when it was abrogated, and so great an increase of crime followed that in '53 it was re-enacted, they did not persevere in their opposition to the new code.

The Commission of Inquiry into the working of the national system of education in Ireland will shortly present its report. The opposition of the Roman Catholic priesthood to the existing system has been of long continuance. It is stated that the Commission will so far defer to their objections as to recommend a compromise between the neutral and denominational systems. "Where only one school exists in a parish the principle of mixed education is to be maintained, but where there are two schools one is to be distinctively Protestant and the other distinctively Catholic, or neutral if preferred." This would amount to a virtual adoption of the scheme pursued in Prussia, with, it is said, the best results. It is extremely questionable, however, in the face of the growing sentiment in Great Britain in favor of an unsectarian system of education, whether such a plan will ever receive legislative sanction.

There is no doubt that the civilized world is upon the threshold of important events in matters of religion, but whether they will amount to a revolution, as asserted by Mr. BEECHER at Plymouth Church the other evening, is more than questionable. In matters of faith mankind move slowly, for the reason that the great majority are indifferent; while the earnest adherents of creeds are, in their way, conservative. Even radical religionists are generally content to work within their own legitimate spheres, and very few of them are enthusiastic enough to engage in general missionary work. The result is that sudden and marked changes of religious thought, or disruptions of existing organizations are almost impossible. Slow modifications are going on silently and constantly, but seldom if ever does a revolution occur. Mr. BEECHER furnishes a good illustration of this, in the contrast which he so humorously describes between the early training which he received in New-England Calvinism, and the more radical ideas of which he is now so able a champion. Still Plymouth Church is far from revolutionary.

The cry of Eureka is always calculated to arrest attention; and we are invariably interested in the announcement of any new thing—always hoping something better is going to turn up "this time." We have had a good many flushes of expectation in this way—regarding, for instance, ERICSSON's "hot and cold" motors for ships, the brilliant new oxygen light, and many other excellent matters of invention, which, however, are very slow in putting in an actual appearance and "coming up to the sounding terms of the manifesto." We lately had a notice of a way to make ice in any quantity—our Summer trust in this being still reasonably good—and now we have our correspondent, "Inventor," proposing to convey the telegraph wires in a neat, compact manner otherwise than by poles, and make use of their electricity to light and extinguish the City lamps, all at once—suggesting at the same time a number of additional good economic uses of the same electric agency. At present we are only at the beginning of our knowledge of electricity; and no doubt its adaptations may yet change the modes of progress and the face of things in some very surprising way.

The Fijian Islands are anxious to be annexed by some nation strong enough to protect them. They contain but a few thousand white settlers, and nearly two hundred thousand natives. The settlers have bought estates, and are cultivating sugar, cotton and other tropical productions with success; but having no well-organized government, they are constantly subject to annoyance and outrage by the natives. Some years ago the white settlers applied to Great Britain for a protectorate, but the proposition was declined. At one time the Fijians began to look hopefully to the United States for relief, and it is known that Mr. SEWARD favored the project of bringing the islands under the American flag; but the Melbourne authorities objected, and the matter was dropped. Recently a movement has been undertaken to bring the Fiji group under the rule of the authorities of Sydney, which, being itself a colony, will make a very anomalous condition of affairs.

The following has vague comes from the Tribune:

> Mr. GEORGE JONES, wearied out with his burdensome cares as sole editor of the NEW-YORK TIMES, is about to sail for Europe, murmuring as he goes,
> The Times is out of joint; O, cursed spite,
> That I was ever born to set it right.
> With this "willful and malicious lie,"—
> It is reported that Mr. JAMES B. TAYLOR is to assume the editorial chair in Mr. JONES' absence.

Mendelssohn.

At Dr. TYNG's Church, yesterday morning, Miss PAMELA BOLL sang "Come unto Him," from the Messiah, as the piece she sang at Miss PARKER's appearance was a pleasant surprise to the congregation, staged with regret, however, that it is the last time the welcome notes of her superb voice will be heard in America for quite a season to come. In her approaching trip to Europe she carries with her the best wishes of the thousands who have been privileged to hear her sing, accompanied by the hope that her absence may be of the shortest possible duration.

POLITICS IN FRANCE.

The Ministerial Crisis—Working Robers in the Corps Legislatif—M. Ollivier's Speech with Marron Moved and the Members of the Right—Vote of Confidence in the Ministry.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Monday, June 6, 1870.

The Ollivier Ministry has just had a narrow escape. In some of my recent letters I pointed out to you the shoals on which they were likely to strike and the efforts that would be made by the old Right to bring in M. ROUHER and a Cabinet of reactionists. The results of Saturday's debate in the Corps Legislatif on M. BETHMOUT's amendment touching the expediency of authorizing public meetings during the electoral period preceding the proclamation of the senatus consulta gravamen, had here the policy and intentions of M. JEROME DAVID and his associates, and compelled the Ministry to cast its lot definitively with the Center Gauche and the other liberal elements of the Chamber. This decision had been anticipated, from the check sustained by the Cabinet the previous day, and the lobbies were crowded by an anxious and eager public, among whom were to be recognized a great many members of the Senate and several members of the Diplomatic Corps. The interpellation of M. BETHMOUT furnished the Government with the opportunity which it was said to desire; that of either rallying the majority to its allegiance, or of abandoning office with honor. Had it neglected to seize it, its ultimate expulsion under circumstances which would have deprived it of all the benefit of the struggles which it had so bravely sustained in support of its programme would have followed. Although fully sensible of the grave importance of his interpellations, M. BETHMOUT developed it in language of great calmness and moderation. After exposing the divergency which he thought existed between the declarations of the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Justice upon the subject of the authorization of public reunions for the elections of the conseils generaux, and admitting that the question had lost some of its importance from the briefness of the interval left until the elections took place, he demanded, if the Ministry did not deem it opportune, to present during the next session a projet de loi which would accord to the electors for the elections of the conseils generaux and the conseils d'arrondissement the right of reunion which existed for the elections to the Corps Legislatif. M. OLLIVIER, after explaining that the text of the law was clear upon the subject, and that the Government had no alternative left but to apply it, proceeded to defend the Cabinet against the attacks by which it was sought to undermine it. The rest of the debate is so interesting that I shall give it in the speaker's own words:

M. OLLIVIER—You will permit me now to enter into a general explanation. No position is more difficult, none more combated, than that of the Ministry. [Sensation.] At one time it is accused of proceeding too rapidly, at another of taking refuge in adjournment. It is blamed for both. It daily finds itself in conflict from different sides of the Chamber, with demands and pretensions which are opposed to each other. As every day its position is being secretly undermined, it must neglect no occasion of strengthening it. The Cabinet, in the name of which I have the honor to speak, is, in the Chamber, is now and will remain during the whole period of its existence, the Cabinet of the 2d of January. [applause:] that is to say, a Cabinet which has received from the Sovereign, from the Chamber and from the nation the difficult but glorious mandate of establishing without revolution, and without trouble, a real and durable liberty. The Cabinet labors daily with all its strength to realize its programme. It will fulfill it to the end without disturbation or timidity. It will, nevertheless, fulfill it maturely, and it will not compromise it by improvidence. But however great may be its good-will, without your confidence it is powerless. What signifies the fact that a hostile vote may drive it from power? By its fall it will again serve the cause of parliamentary liberty by putting in practice one of its fundamental rules. [Agitation.] There is only an existence languishing and without grandeur which it must refuse to accept. That which occurred in the sitting of yesterday, added to other recent acts, has shaken the certainty which we have felt in the support of this Chamber. [Cries of "No! No!" from several members. Prolonged sensation.]

M. PAUL BETHMONT—I ask leave to reply.

M. OLLIVIER—We feel rejoiced that this interpellation affords us an opportunity of interrogating the majority.

Baron JEROME DAVID—I request permission to speak.

M. OLLIVIER—I resume. A question of right has been put to us: "Have you or have you not the fidelity of authorizing public reunions?" Our answer is that we do not think we possess any such right. We call upon the Chamber to reply by the order of the day, pure and simple, to the demand of interpellation which has been addressed to us, for if it were to act otherwise we should conclude that we no longer possess its confidence. [Agitation.]

M. GRAMIER DE CASSAGNAC—We are all agreed on that. We cannot reply to the question otherwise than by an affirmative.

M. JEROME DAVID—I believe that under the Parliamentary regime the Cabinet question disengages itself from the votes of the Assembly. These votes become marked, and are judged according to the part which the members of the Cabinet have taken in the discussion, according to the order which they have brought to the support of their theories, and to the solutions which the Chamber has given to them. But before a vote can be passed, at the moment when a vote is about to take place, I say that to make a Cabinet question out of an incident of no boundary importance is an act of intimidation, as far as I am concerned. [Applause from several benches. Continued agitation.] It is an indirect infringement of our prerogatives. Just now a member of the Cabinet said at the tribune, "You have all the liberties." Well, if we have all the liberties, permit us to exercise them freely. [Applause from the Right.] What! you would suddenly raise the question of confidence and ask from us an absolute affirmation! Just look at the situation in which you place my friends and myself. We may think that you do not fulfill up to the present the hopes that the country had a right to conceive on your entrance into office. We may think that you are wanting in decision; that up to the present time you are a Ministry of indecision; that your acts are not strongly characterized; that it would be difficult to premise in what road you march and in what line you conduct the country; we may think that it is difficult to say whether you are authoritarian or liberal. [Sensation.] We have heard you hold at this tribune a language so authoritarian that your predecessors would not have accepted it. [Applause from the Left.] We have heard you at other times use a language ultra liberal in its tone. It remains to be seen if the use of the word ultra liberal to keep my expression within certain limits. We may think all this without giving you a vote of want of confidence, which in any case would not be comprehensible on the occasion of an interpellation which permits no reply, and has not for the Chamber an exceptional interest.

M. GAMBETTA—Good! You are perfectly right.

Baron DAVID—Of an interpellation which in the conditions under which it has taken place, and in the terms to which M. BETHMOUT has reduced it, had become almost a debate without interest. And in such circumstances you say that you respect the Parliamentary regime when you come and declare at the tribune, "If the vote is not favorable we shall retire; if the vote is favorable we shall interpret it as a testimony of confidence." I maintain that a vote obtained in such manner will be a fiction, and not a reality. [Applause from the Left and the extreme Right.] It will be all the more a fiction from the fact that under present circumstances, after the reservations that I have just made, my friends and I will vote for you. [Exclamations and laughter on the Left.]

M. PAUL BETHMONT—Permit me to say that I make exactly the same declaration as the Hon. Baron DAVID. The Minister has replied to a Cabinet question which was not put.

M. OLLIVIER—Fortunately, gentlemen, the second part of the Hon. Baron DAVID's speech has corrected the first. Without that, involuntarily, no doubt, he would have furnished us with a pretext for feeling very proud. He represents me as seeking to intimidate the Chamber, because we have just modestly said to you, "If you have no confidence in us we shall resign." In this language there is nothing which resembles an act of intimidation. Permit me, Sir, to tell you, you invoke the rights of the Chamber, and you are justified in so doing. I prove to you that I do not want to infringe upon them in the slightest degree, and you should recognize the rights possessed by honest men, devoted to a difficult task, which always all their moments, not to accept that they should be placed in the impossibility of accomplishing their task, nor to consider as supporters those who have at heart the sentiments which you have expressed.

M. EMANUEL ARAGO—Well, as you are aware, send in your resignation. [Exclamations and laughter.]

M. OLLIVIER—I thank the honorable M. JEROME DAVID for his frankness; we know, and it he will permit me the use of an expression still more just, we feel that there exists among a portion of this Chamber complaints and disapprobations which either do or do not find expression, but which manifest themselves indirectly. We feel that among a certain portion of the Assembly there does not exist, I will not say those sentiments of affection, but that sympathy which renders solutions easy and struggles light. There results from this for us a situation which, to speak the truth on the Parliamentary Regime, if it be not accountable time a Ministry shall speak out, combat and stipulate in the name of Deputies who regard it as a

[illegible]

England it was thought the Canadians had comparatively little to do in preventing a successful invasion. The action of the United States authorities, too, had the effect of causing the efforts of our volunteer force to be looked upon as of very little importance. But it is just the action of the American Government that has given rise to the present excitement. The old jealousy still exists here, and the Canadians cannot brook the notion that their republican neighbors should receive so much credit for what they did. Moreover, in the present instance, it is held that whatever credit is given to the United States must naturally detract from the honor and glory of our "gallant defenders," the Provincial volunteers. By awarding praise to the United States authorities it is considered as completely ignoring our own forces, and, as a matter of course, in this way the present feeling has been engendered. The base of Earl GRANVILLE and the Press is regarded as particularly obnoxious and savoring of a desire on the part of the Imperial Government to be as offensive as possible. Whether right or wrong, it is insisted that this course of policy will ultimately lead to unfavorable results, and it is denounced accordingly.

THE NEXT STEP.

That the matter is regarded as a serious one by the people of Canada must be evident from the fact of a member of the Dominion Government being deputed to proceed to England without delay, and present a case for the consideration of those who are charged with bringing about the unpleasant state of things complained of, and which, it is said, if nothing is done to reverse the policy decided on, must terminate in a separation. Those who were strongest in their attachment to England are now the loudest in condemning what they consider unfair treatment; they declare that they are quite willing to remain as they are, but do not think it deceives upon them, as colonists, to fight all the battles of England on this continent, unaided and even without any encouragement. Naturally enough, perhaps, they believe that England cares less for Canada than formerly, and is not, therefore, so anxious to maintain troops for its defense, the idea having prevailed that Canada should be sufficiently able to take care of itself. This brings us to the grand turning point again. If England wants nothing more with Canada, she will offer no resistance to any change the people may wish to make; but, say those who feel the strongest in the matter, we are not prepared to take upon ourselves the functions and maintenance of a separate existence as a nation, and annexation being in the background for the present, there seems to be some difficulty in arriving at what the intention would be in case of a quarrel with England. That a quarrel will ensue should a reversion of the present Colonial policy be refused is almost certain for it is apparent that further intimation is out of the question. It is hinted that England may secure the confidence and approval of the people of this country by means of a reconciliation with the United States, but that might possibly involve a more serious quarrel. The Imperial authorities, it is now held, should insist upon the entire suppression of the Fenian organization in the United States, its avowed and only object being the invasion and subjugation of the Dominion. Were this done, we are told, that the good will of our people would be more firmly established than ever, and the result now looked for happily averted. The feeling of dissatisfaction which prevails has been somewhat substituted by the preparations now making for the departure of the last troops left in the country, all of whom, with the exception of a portion of the Sixtieth Rifles now on their way to Red River, being under orders to return to England. It is rumored, however, that the order for the Rifle Brigade—Prince ARTHUR's regiment—has been countermanded. When once completely denuded of Imperial soldiers, it is not at all probable that any will be sent hither again; and that belief operates very strongly in prejudicing the people against England and tends to strengthen the feeling now dominant in the public mind of this country.

The Drift of Public Opinion in the New Dominion—Speedy Removal of Troops from England Discussed Necessary.

From the London (Ont.) Free Press, June 17.

It is not an unimportant indication of the tendency of public opinion that, while the Journal de Quebec has hoisted the flag of independence of Canada, the Toronto Globe expresses itself in tones of unmistakable dissatisfaction at the English attitude toward Canada. No doubt the late Fenian raid has done much to excite prevailing feeling, but that effect is only incident to our position. The radical difficulty is not the Fenian raid but the condition of affairs under which it becomes possible. If the United States Government thought Canada would be respected as great a feeling of clearly as was the insult to the British flag when carried on the Trent, Gen. GRANT would have been a good deal more active with his proclamation. But it is patent to the world, to the States as well as ourselves, from the mouths of prominent English statesmen as well as from the Press, that Canada must fight its own battles. Nothing can be fairer than that, we think. In that case, however, we must be allowed to make our own quarrels. It will never do for England to make the row and Canadians to have their heads broken over it. Nobody would be satisfied with that arrangement, and it cannot continue. What seems to be needed is that some "other form of alliance," of which the Governor-General spoke to us at Quebec, by which England would be relieved of the care, anxiety and expense of this colony, and Canada would not be subjected to the risk of war such as that concerning the Trent, the Alabama, or Ireland's "wrongs." The constant tremor in which the country is placed is most injurious to it, and the necessity of some alteration in the existing status is forcing itself upon the public mind everywhere. Canada, like Switzerland, like the Free Press, has long held that independence guaranteed by France, England and the United States, is the best solution to the difficulty. Hon. Mr. CAMERON, Speaker of the Senate, now advocates independence in his paper, the Journal, and even the staid Quebec Gazette, historically conservative, is considered by many

"The only escape from such a condition of humiliation, seeing that the Imperial Government highly approves of the inability or unwillingness of that of the United States to prevent the recurrence of the wrongs which we have so long complained of, is a peaceful separation from the parent state, and from the latter. Now, mind, we are expressing the contingency, we confess it does not at all surprise us to find the Government of the home Government—we will not say of the people, for we believe they would almost unanimously declare against such a step—actually considering relaxing the opposition which has hitherto been made by the Colonial Office, and, in fact, by the Press generally in Canada, to 'Independence.' Of course, the moment such a step is taken, the whole east is millions, and the American Government is greatly applauded by that of England for coming on the scene after the mischief is done, and the invaders have retired, some political change will have to be contemplated."

There can be no mistake as to the drift of the tide.

Young People's Entertainment—Address by Rev. J. P. Swift.

Rev. J. P. SWIFT preached a sermon, last evening, in the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Attorney-street, from the thirty-fourth chapter of Isaiah, sixteenth verse: "Seek ye out the Book of the Lord and read." The speaker alluded to the fact that this was an age of reading, and people, young and old, men and women, read pretty much everything that was printed in the shape of books, magazines, periodicals and the light literature of the day. The Bible was the book of books, yet how few matched a leisure moment while at his desk and read; on cars a great variety of literature could be found in the hands of the passengers, and on steam-boats the hours of travel were whiled away by reading books, papers or anything that could be obtained. The reading public now embraced the great majority of the community, and the daily newspapers, filled as they are with the current news of the day, are devoured by their readers, who thus become perfectly familiar with the current news of the day. The speaker referred to the mass of periodical "yellow-covered literature," which was found in the hands of young men and women, and the reading of which poisoned their minds and unfitted them for reading which would improve and instruct. He said that reading makes a fine man, and thinking a great man. MILTON, by reading the works of Chaucer and others, was enabled to store his mind with those grand ideas which subsequent thought elaborated, and thus he obtained those grand conceptions which he embodied in his famous Paradise Lost and Regained. People who read should think as well; should weigh, as it were, while reading, to obtain an idea of the author's meaning and how he got upon what they had read. In this way would their minds become stored with useful knowledge. Works of history should be chosen above all others, as these were instructive and would be useful in the future. The mechanic who, for the sake of his families, with provident authors, could hold a commanding position in society. It had been said that a man could not read steadily, poring day after day

THE MINISTRY OF MUSIC.

Lessons of the Great Jubilee—A Discourse by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.

Rev. O. B. FROTHINGHAM delivered a discourse at Lyric Hall, yesterday morning, on "The Spiritual Mission of Music." He began by speaking of the Jubilee, which had occupied half the days and half the nights during the past week, and attracted thousands of people from all directions. There had been heard the marvelous symphonies and sonatas of BEETHOVEN, the grand oratorios, and the songs and anthems of all the great masters. A celebration in honor of BEETHOVEN in Summer was an anachronism, but that symbolized, for though born in Winter and dying in Spring, he was a man of all the year, and the beauties and charms of every season found expression in his wonderful strains. He was the musical voice of the modern world. The fifty years of his life covered the great crisis of European history with its robust and unbounded aspirations for liberty and a higher political life, and he was in full sympathy with every phase of feeling and experience which characterized his age. He lived intensely. He felt in their highest and strongest forms all the emotions of the heart, and with this high sensibility passed through the varied experiences of human life, giving them expression in strains of music which have no parallel in any age. He was a philosopher as well as a poet and a dreamer, and his compositions were saturated with thought. We comprehend the deep meaning of his symphonies and sonatas, but all feel their inspiration. This was a great tribute to human nature and showed its wonderful capacities. It was a great organ from which none can get nothing, but from which the musician could bring forth symphonies and songs and all the wonderful music that slept slumbered in its bosom. Music, the speaker said, was the expression of feeling and emotion, and as such was far more potent than any words. The mother with a sweet nursery song could touch the soul of the infant, that comprehended no word from her tongue. She could soothe its little troubles and sufferings, and convey to it the love and tenderness which she could express in no other way. The Marseillaise hymn was the voice of the French revolution and spoke the feelings of a nation's heart. The pent-up emotions of the heart of France found in those troublous times expression in that song which sung itself from one soul in a single night, and had been singing through the souls of a nation ever since. "God Save the King" was to every English soul the history and the glory of their great nation compressed into a few words. It was exquisitely adapted to the feeling of a British subject, and it was a shame to us that we had appropriated it when we had a national anthem of our own. Religious feeling too found its most appropriate expression in music. The Catholic mass was the voice of the religion of the middle age. All the sorrows and anthems of all the great masters,

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

The real estate market during the past week, if the Grand Park sale be excepted, has developed no marked features of interest. At the Exchange dullness has been the prevailing characteristic, no noteworthy incident having occurred to break the monotony. The sales of City property at the rooms amount to but $153,750, nearly half of which sum was realized from the sale made on Thursday, by MULLER, WILKINS & Co., of the property on the north-west corner of Nassau and Ann streets, which brought $72,500. The transfers for the week are eighty-eight in number, representing property in the aggregate valued at $1,287,000.

Of suburban sales, the principal one was that made by S. DEGEN & Co., on Thursday, of the fine sub-division of Grand Park at Mamaroneck, in Westchester County. The sale was entirely successful and having already been referred to at length a repetition would be tedious. On Tuesday WYCKOFF & LITTLE offered a large number of lots located at Valley Stream, on the line of the South-side Railway, many of which were sold on the day named to good advantage. On Wednesday, JAMES M. MILLER was to have sold some valuable property at Cruger's, on the Hudson, but no data having been received the result cannot be given.

The above sales, in brief, complete the record of the transactions of the week. In reference to the one to come, if the property offered may be taken as an indication, a greater activity will pervade the market. The following are the principal sales to take place, as already advertised:

To-day, LAWRENCE, OAKLEY & FLEURY, on the grounds at East Lawn, Jamaica, L. I., begin the sale of 300 finely situated lots and villa plots. The sale will take place at noon, and the property will be disposed of, at easy terms, without reserve, to the highest bidder. An excursion train will be run, tickets for which can be obtained at the office of the auctioneers, and a collation will also be provided. The lots remaining unsold will be disposed of a week from to-day. From the publicity already given to this sale the attendance should be a large one.

To-morrow, A. D. MELLICK, Jr., & BROTHER, at 3 P. M., on the premises, sell 200 lots at Greenville, N. J., in Bloomfield township. A special train will leave the foot of Liberty-street at 12:40 A. M. The property offered is on the line of the Central Railway of New-Jersey, twenty minutes' from New-York, and in all respects as represented and desirable. The terms are easy, title good, and sales indisputable.

At the Exchange, to-morrow, LAWRENCE, OAKLEY & FLEURY offer some very desirable City property in Eighteenth-street, east of Sixth-avenue; in Fifty-seventh-street, east of Madison-avenue; and in One Hundred and Twenty-fifth-street, east of Fifth-avenue.

On Wednesday, at 3 P. M., A. D. MELLICK, Jr., & BROTHER announce the sale of fifteen villa sites, containing from sixteen to eighteen city lots, each located at River Terrace, on the east bank of the Passaic River, opposite the City of Paterson, N. J. The plots are admirably situated, and command an extensive view. They are 100 feet front on River Terrace, 150 feet (30 feet wide,) and run over the brow of the hill (sixty to sixty feet high,) to the river, making a plat can 100 by about 300 feet, and a river slope 100 by about 135 feet to each plot. This property is conveyed by horse-cars with the heart of the city; it only cost the owner $1,000 per acre; the street Depot on the Midland Railroad, and three-quarters of a mile from the Norwood Station on the Erie Railway, and connected with them by horse railroad. Fifteen plots, 100x200, or eight city lots each, fronting on the above, will also be sold in one parcel.

On Wednesday, also, MALLORY & BLACKWELL, at 4 P. M., sell at Tarrytown a plot of five acres, beautifully located on high ground, commanding extensive views on the Hudson River and surrounding country for forty miles, with a residence containing eight rooms, finished in modern style, and all the necessary outbuildings. Carriages will meet the train leaving Thirteenth-street, on the Hudson River Railroad, at 2 P. M., and the sale is announced as positive.

Also, on Wednesday, at noon, A. J. BLEECKER, SON & Co. sell at Corona, N. J., 300 lots of various sizes, well situated and in direct communication with the City by means of the Hackensack Railway.

On Saturday, JAS. M. MILLER will dispose of thirty-four plots of land, in size from one-half to nine acres, located at White Plains, in Westchester County. The sale will take place at noon at the Court-house.

The above programme, it will be observed, is quite an extensive one, and those desiring to invest in real estate in the vicinity of New-York seldom have the opportunity in one week to make a selection of location from so many of the various sections of country surrounding the City.

THOMAS E. WAGSTAFF, real estate auctioneer, reports that he has, at private sale, disposed of the following pieces of property:

No. 36 East Forty-ninth-street, four-story brown-stone house, opposite Columbia College, $36,000; No. 126 West Forty-seventh-street, three-story brown-stone house, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, $31,000; No. 128 East Fifty-fifth-street, three-story brown-stone house, $30,000; Fifteenth-street, two lots, south side, between Madison and Fifth avenues, $9,000; No. 206 Henry-street, three-story brick house, $13,000.

MERIONETHSHIRE, NORTH WALES.—The Aber-Hirnant Estate.—AN UNCOMMON, important and highly valuable Freehold Property, containing about 12,000 acres, in a ring fence, situate in the Parishes of Llanycil and Llanfor, in the County of Merioneth, about three miles from the market town of Bala, on the Great Western Railway, Station at Bala, Dolgellis branch, within eight hours of London, three and a half hours of Liverpool, and within easy reach of Manchester, Birmingham, and Chester. The Aber-Hirnant residence is a comfortable shooting-box, charmingly placed in a romantic valley. The house, grounds are beautifully undulating, rapidly and prettily, with the river Hirnant, in which there is excellent trout fishing, winding through them, and the long valley, on the hill sides of which are obtainable fine mountain mutton, and the green valley of Bala, into opinions unequaled for villas. There are the bailiff's house and several farm-houses and homesteads with inclosed lands (arable and grass), amounting in all to about 1,000 acres, some farms in hand and others let to Scotch and Welsh farmers at very moderate rents, with extensive and valuable sheep-walks. The grouse shooting contains about 1,000 acres, and have long been celebrated as being the most extensive and best shooting of the kind in Scotch moors both in extent and capabilities. They abound in heather and whortleberry, and are in a wild and lovely mountain district. There is good partridge shooting on the lower portions of the estate. Bala passes by the Aber-Hirnant residence. With little exception the river is not few public roads through the property. This is one of the most picturesque and romantic valleys, and the passes of great beauty and extent, some being specially selected by tourists for their grandeur and picturesque character. The mineral rights are valuable, the lead mines in the adjoining valleys are the Yskwd-Gron, the Hirnant, where by the confluence of the two rivers above which is a large pool, the Nant-y-Sarn, the Hirnant-Cefnen, the Bryn-Gwenallt, and the Llanfor, the property of the Earl of the Wrexham; a great lighter ore bearing, there are many other veins, numerous galenas, and slate, containing manganese and iron, and forming endless quarries and falls. The demesne is partly in hand, partly in virgin estate, is having never yet been enclosed. It is known to contain valuable timber, and extensive beds of slate of excellent quality, besides white stone, and a mountain of steatite or soap-stone. There are veins of limestone in great abundance, and red sand stone, underlying which it is almost certain there are beds of coal. Also indications of lead and other minerals, which, if worked, would be easily conveyed by tramways through the valleys to the Bala Railway Station! Thus, as an investment this property would prove especially beneficial. The hill-sides are peculiarly capable for the growth of larch, which can be sown by the large plantations now existing. In the event of some large towns requiring extra water, amply, the estate has natural capabilities for making reservoirs into which the aqueous streams could be conveyed, and about a mile from Aber-Hirnant residence a church has lately been erected. The present rental is small compared with the value of the estate, but it is capable of considerable increase. The mineral shootings and mineral advantages, give the great value to the property, combined with its extent, embracing an area of about 12 miles in circumference.

Messrs. DRIVER have been instructed to offer the above valuable and important DOMAIN to public COMPETITION, at the Auction Mart, 10 Tokenhouse-yard, London, on TUESDAY, the 26 of August, at 2 o'clock, in one lot. Particulars, with plans and views, may be had of Messrs. Cooke, Kinston & Cooke, solicitors, No. 7 Bedford-row, London; of Messrs. Driver, surveyors, land agents and auctioneers, No. 6 Whitehall, London; of R. W. Nots.—The Aber-Hirnant residence is to be to be viewed by orders only, to be had of the solicitors and auctioneers as above.

SUNDAY DEBAUCHERIES.

Whisky, Knives and Pistols at Work Once More.

Probable Homicide by a Member of the Fire Department—Several Serious Affrays—Miscellaneous Offenses and Arrests.

The evils attending the almost unrestricted sale of intoxicating liquors on the Sabbath seem to increase with each succeeding week. The arrests made by the Police during the twenty-four hours after midnight of Saturday are largely due to the drunkenness prevailing during the day of rest, and sober-minded people are scandalized by the behavior of those who seek enjoyment in the poisonous beverages dealt to them by liquor-dealers throughout the City. The outcry that was made against the shameful violation of the present law has already had the effect of compelling the dealers to ostensibly close their places of business, though the entrances and convenient side doors leave the latch-string hanging on the outside. Go where you would yesterday, the liquor traffic could be found in busy occupation, the tokens being observable in the presence of two or more loungers in the vicinity, and the frequent appearance of fresh customers. The Police are powerless to counteract the evil, for they can make no arrests except through a warrant procured from a Magistrate on formal complaint, on the part of a citizen, so the liquor dealers are defiant, and reap an abundant harvest. Yesterday proved no exception to the general rule, for we have to report several affrays and assaults, except the cases being of so grave a character as to require the action of a Coroner in obtaining the ante-mortem statement of a dying victim.

JOSEPH POLLARD, who resides at No. 86 Grand-street, became involved in a quarrel early yesterday morning, near his residence, with JAMES HENDERSON, a bar-keeper at No. 308 Wooster-street, and JAMES GILBERT, the agent of the premises occupied by him. The dispute ended in POLLARD's being assaulted by HENDERSON and GILBERT, one of whom drew a knife and stabbed him in the back of the head, the wound being a very severe one. Both of the assailants were arrested and arraigned before Justice COX, at the Jefferson Market Court, when they were remanded for examination.

About 2 o'clock yesterday morning JAMES CORBIN, of No. 19 Crosby-street, and JOHN CASEY, who resides in Clinton-place, were met in Broadway, near the corner of Grand-street, by THOMAS BRENNAN, living in Wooster-street, and JOHN KENNA, of No. 205 Hester-street, when some ugly words were exchanged. The result was an attack upon CASEY and CORBIN by the other two men. CORBIN was severely cut on the head and face by KENNA, besides being kicked and beaten, while CASEY was stabbed on the head and in the face by BRENNAN. An alarm was given by the victims and responded to by Officers AITKIN and LEWIS, of the Fourteenth Precinct, who arrested BRENNAN and KENNA and arraigned them before Justice HOGAN, who held them for trial in default of bail. CASEY is now in Bellevue Hospital.

LEVI KNOWLES, who is an insect destroyer by occupation, took it into his head yesterday morning to frighten CHARLES STREET, of No. 6 Christopher-street, at No. 1 Sixth-avenue, and there drew a loaded revolver and threatened to blow the druggist's brains out, although no provocation had been offered. Mr. CRITTENDEN called in a policeman and had KNOWLES arraigned before Justice COX at Jefferson Market. The prisoner denied the charge, but admitted at the time he committed the outrage. The Magistrate committed KNOWLES for examination.

An affray occurred at 3 o'clock yesterday morning between JOHN VALLOIT and EDWARD MILLER, who both reside at No. 150 Mott-st. MILLER, who, it appears, had a grudge against VALLOIT on the head with the novel weapon, causing a severe scalp wound. MILLER escaped before the Police heard of the affray.

THOMAS MCLAUGHLIN, of No. 300 West Houston-street, quarreled yesterday morning at No. 118 Greenwich-street, with a woman named, the woman struck him in the face with some improvised weapon, and severely wounded him. MARY was not arrested.

A few minutes after midnight of Saturday, Capt. CAMERON, of the Eighteenth Precinct, learned that a shooting affray had occurred in Forty-seventh-street, near First-avenue. He on investigation and found PATRICK FARRELL, of No. 231 First-avenue, lying in the drug-store at the corner of Fifteenth-street and First-avenue, dangerously wounded in the right side by a pistol ball, and on the arrival of an ambulance he was sent to Bellevue Hospital. It was subsequently ascertained that the bullet had been fired by WM. HAMILTON, an engineer of Engine Company No. 5, of the Fire Department, for whom a search was made, but the Police failed to find him. HAMILTON, however, voluntarily surrendered himself to the Seventeenth Precinct Police at 9½ o'clock yesterday morning. He stated that while standing in front of his engine-house, in Fourteenth-street, he was suddenly and wantonly assaulted by JEREMIAH GLEASON, of No. 407 West-Twelfth-street, WILLIAM CRITTENDEN, and PATRICK CALLAHAN, of No. 37 Seventh-street. Finding himself in danger of being overpowered, HAMILTON drew a revolver and fired three shots, which had the effect of freeing him of his assailants. The prisoner professed to know nothing of FARRELL, as he did not see him at the time of the affray, but he supposed he must have been with the gang who assaulted him, or in the immediate neighborhood. Coroner PETERS was subsequently notified that FARRELL was in a dangerous condition, so he repaired to the Hospital and took his ante-mortem statement. FARRELL stated that he identified HAMILTON as the man who had shot him, and alleged that there existed a rivalry between the CALLAHANS and HAMILTON relative to picnic associations, and that he and several others were witnesses to an assault upon the firemen by the CALLAHANS, who belonged to the same social club as himself. He was the President of HAMILTON's club, and HAMILTON was the foreman of the engine-house, and FARRELL acted it in order to prevent a row. HAMILTON then ran into the house, and on coming out again fired the pistol shots, one of which took effect in FARRELL's side. The physicians at the Hospital consider FARRELL to be fatally shot, as the ball lodged in the region of the kidneys and beyond the reach of a probe. As the jury rendered a verdict that HAMILTON had wounded FARRELL, the Coroner remanded him to the Tombs to await results. The prisoner is represented to be a man of sober and quiet habits, having been a member of the volunteer fire and paid departments. FARRELL is a letter-carrier at Station F, and a quiet member of society, so far as the Police are aware. The testimony of several eye-witnesses to the affray fully corroborate HAMILTON's version, and they consider that he acted purely in self-defense.

MICHAEL MCGOVERN, a stevedore in the City, appeared before Justice HOGAN, on Saturday, at the Tombs, and made complaint against CATHARINE SMITH and ANN WILLIAMS for larceny. COMPLAINANT met the women in the street and accompanied them to a Water-street den, where he fell asleep, and on awaking discovered that $70 of his money had been pickpocketed. In a short while the women were arrested and brought before the Magistrate, but MCGOVERN failed to identify the prisoners as the parties who had robbed him. The women then offered to pay his way home, but CAPTAIN declined to settle the matter in that way, and caused their arrest. The Magistrate considering the case in his own mind, held the accused for trial, and dismissed the complainant to the House of Detention.

JOHN R. P. DOYLE, of No. 407 West-Thirty-third-street, a newspaper reporter, called the attention of HENRY BEARDLY, aged Thirty-years, residing at Hackensack, N. J., on a charge of attempting to steal his watch while riding on an Eighth-avenue car. When the boy was arraigned before Justice HOGAN, at the Tombs, the complainant failed to produce sufficient evidence to CAPTAIN RYAN, who discharged the prisoner.

MARGARET FLYNN, proprietress of a disorderly house, at No. 10 Rose-street, was arrested yesterday morning, together with six of her girls, on the complaint of the neighbors. The prisoners were duly arraigned before Justice HOGAN at the Tombs, and MARGARET was held for examination, the others being committed as disorderly characters.

In the Yorkville Police Court, yesterday, Justice BERRY remanded JOHN A. MERHAUSER, and CHAS. PETION, the proprietors of the faro-bank at No. 103 Nassau-street, for examination on Wednesday week, and discharged the other twelve prisoners, without the usual fine, on their plea of poverty.

On Saturday night, JOHN SMITH stole a gold watch, of the value of $25, from THEODORE BEITER, residing at the corner of Sixty-first-street and Eleventh-avenue. He was yesterday committed to answer, by Justice BERRY, in the Yorkville Police Court.

PHILIP HERMANN, who resides in a priority of Seventeenth-street and Fifty-fourth-street, quarreled with CHARLES PETION, who lives in the same neighborhood, on Saturday night, and stabbed him in the arm with a knife. HERMANN was yesterday held by Justice BERRY to answer.

Officer FOY, of the Nineteenth Precinct, had JOHN DURST arrested on a charge of selling adulterated milk, which he had for sale. The officer caught him in the act on Saturday evening last. He was held in $500 bail to answer at the Special Sessions.

JOHN DRAYER, alias "Yellow Hayes," residing in Seventy-fourth-street, was stabbed in the back yesterday by some unknown man, with whom he quarreled.

ANNIE LYNCH, aged two years, was shot through the head by some unknown person, as she sat on the stoop of her parents' residence, No. 10 Morris-street. The shot was fired from the door of No. 26 Washington, and strikes under the child's eye, breaking the upper and lower jaw. She cannot possibly recover.

Temperance Meeting at the Cooper Institute—Address of Rev. J. C. Stoughton.

The usual Sunday evening temperance meeting, held at the Cooper Institute under the auspices of the Sons of Temperance, was largely attended last evening. After some spirited singing by PHILIP PHILLIPS and the taking of the usual "string collection," Rev. Mr. MERRITT introduced Rev. J. C. STOUGHTON, P. G. W. P., of Chicago, Ill., who delivered a temperance address. After stating that the temperance question presented new phases now, and he should discuss it from a new standpoint, the speaker said that no time in our history, was so fraught with perils as the present hour. On our Christian faith rested our future. Veterans had proved with unanswerable logic, that anything in this country which tended to subvert the Christian religion was illegal. The same doctrine had been recently uttered in Cincinnati. Temperance and religion are found together and every rum-seller is a criminal against the law of the land. A powerful antagonism to the religion of our fathers had sprung up in our midst, demanding that legislation should have nothing to do with the morals of the community. A political party unsettled the whole land, backed by the most powerful uncurbed corporation in the world. No papers dare oppose the principle that legislation has nothing to do with morals, yet stealing, adultery and murder are purely moral questions. It is claimed even that the liquor traffic is a legitimate branch of American commerce. A man pledged to the principles of temperance is said not to be a free-man. That was the Dred Scott decision of the rum power in the United States. There existed a combination of German infidelity, French socialism and lager-beer to sustain this principle. Lager-beer was at the bottom of the whole thing. Lager-beer was the devil. The adversary knew much enough to understand that liberty can be coexistent with a restraint on moral evils. The rights and preferences of the few must give way for the good of the many. They interpret "liberty" to be freedom for all passions. The German Revolution, fostered by Belmont with their pipes and lager-beer, have undertaken to teach Americans liberty. And they come from a land where all the wars ever fought were fought for despotism. We are requested to change our usages, from Congress to the common schools, and reverse our judicial decisions to gratify the brutal greed of a class of men, of whom statesmen were ignorance. Lived by King Alcohol to fight Americans. This insolence must stop. Because lager is national in Germany is no reason for its being so here; because Sunday is a day of festivity and drinking in Germany it shall not be so here. (Applause.) As Senator TRUMBULL said, the whole Government is made to swing around the whisky ring. The time has come for the reconstruction of politics on a moral basis. When the rum power assumed the aggressive it forfeited the right to mere toleration. The charge is false that we bring temperance into politics. Before the end of this year of Jubilee it will be found that this is America and those who cannot conform to our customs had better stay on the other side of the water. Our jails and poor-houses would be empty, our taxes two-thirds and our criminals four-fifths reduced if the temperance cause succeeded. We must get religion into politics and not politics into religion. The moral and religious elements of the country must inaugurate a reform, and if it fails there is nothing left for us. We must be converted in our pockets as well as in our hearts. The devil has an organized party, why not the Lord. A member of Congress said the Republicans dared win the whisky votes and then whip in the "Presbyterians." What are we to think of such things? Work and work earnestly.

After some more singing and remarks from Messrs. MERRITT and JONES the meeting adjourned.

POSTHUMOUS POWER.

The Works of Men Live After Them—Sermon by H. W. Beecher.

At Plymouth Church, yesterday morning, Mr. BEECHER preached a sermon with more than his usual vigor and eloquence, taking for his text the last clause of the fourth verse of the eleventh chapter of Paul's epistle to the Hebrews, as follows: "And by it, he being dead, yet speaketh." The lesson which the speaker sought to impress upon his congregation was that if a man wishes to perpetuate his name, and to have it handed down to posterity, as one who was a benefactor of his race, he must do something in his life-time which will be remembered by future generations. This generation, and those to come as well, will doubtless appreciate the leading men according to their merits. The feeling to be remembered and applauded by our children was a universal one. As one approaches the lower conditions of the animal creation he sees the horse and the dog—more impro ved certainly than any other—making signs to man which cannot be mistaken. There is really a kind of intelligence about them. But as to the revelations of the future they know nothing. We call them brutes; perhaps they are in a certain sense. But here is man, created, it is said, in the image of God—what has he to be accountable for more than the animals named? He has the book of Revelation; that is the answer. Over the bright bridge of Christ's words man can now walk with a safe footing. He appealed to persons who had lost their relatives, and especially those children who have lost father and mother by the hand of death. In this world people have enough to do without dealing much with the dead past. Men die—sometimes our prominent men drop off in the most sudden and unexpected manner—and unless they have made some provision which shall cause to the good of the public, their names are forgotten very soon after their bodies are deposited in the cemetery. No matter how rich men are when they die, if they do not leave some monument behind them, their names are suddenly forgotten. Those persons whose earth-life has shown that they have lived to bless the race, and to make the world better for their having passed through it, will never be forgotten. The great trouble with many rich men is that they live only for self—they are selfish all over. It was, he said, the right and the duty of business men to amass a fortune whenever and wherever they can do it in all honest and proper ways. But having, by fair and honest means, gained a fortune of millions, what is to become of it when they die? They cannot take it with them in the land beyond the river; that is very certain. Is it not their duty so to dispose of the funds with which God has prospered them, so that the human family may be benefited, and it may have an influence in that direction, that their memory be perpetuated? Christ lived, and his name will be continued long after their names among men are forgotten. Men who have contributed to make good sewerages, good railroads, good warehouses, good churches and good schools will not only not be forgotten, but their influence and the effect of their labors will be felt long after the dust in the urn lies in the dust. The man who contributes to an invention which saves manual labor is a public benefactor. And in this respect HOWE and others who have invented and improved upon the sewing-machine, have been great benefactors to the human category with their and in cash. Many persons who have died worth their millions of dollars have not conferred so great benefits upon the community as Mr. Howe has. Think for a moment of the Hell Gate River Bridge and the great advantages which must necessarily flow from it. The man who devised that great bridge will live from two to five hundred years, and the work will live to do the good resulting from it, and will perhaps ultimately may not live to see the completion of the work—but whether they do or not, their works will live after them, and though they be dead they will yet speak. The same might be said of the man who as architect—the man who devised the plans and directing the work in the Central Park, New-York, and Prospect Park, Brooklyn. The work thus designed will tend upon future generations, would tell in a way and in a manner that their money could not. If Mr. CORCORAN had done nothing more than what he has done for city parks, he could afford to lay his head down in peace and await the general resurrection. Wealth amounted to very little in the world. Men die, leaving to actual labor and the use of those brains which the God of the universe has given to him, is able to amass money honestly, let him during his life-time dispose of it in such a way as will be for the good of his kind. What does the world care for a man who has lived only for himself? Nothing—and such would always be the case as long as human nature is the same. There was, he said, no better way for rich men to expend their money than to give to deserving young men and women the help them to obtain an education. Education is what we want—educate the young men and women of this generation properly, and the country may be regarded as safe. But if people can do no better with their means, let their last act be—they will be a standing monument for a century to come in every town and village where a man is willing to invest a few dollars. He addressed himself to his hearers to do something which would tell after they are dead. Thus, said he, of the names of VAIL, of LANE, of CORNELL, of VANDER and of ASTOR. Type, they are names which have not sounded far down as yet, but they will go down to posterity in the same category with GERARD. It was right for men to organize and work for the purpose of accumulating wealth in order that they might do good. But above all there ought to be a stronger feeling in the community in regard to the great principles. In illustrating what he had said, he said that if ALFRED VAIL had done nothing more than what he called "the Rock of Ridge," he would have left a name to be held in honor by a grateful people. He was a man who was well-to-do, and he spent his money in making the first practical telegraph, and in making the great operation that connected Washington with Baltimore. He was a man who would have been immortal.

Temperance Meeting at the Fifth-avenue Presbyterian Church—Addresses by a Reformed Spanish Catholic Priest and a Presbyterian Minister Encouraged in the Work.

There was a large congregation at the Fifth-avenue Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. HALL's, last evening, brought thither to listen to the experiences of Rev. Signor CARRERA, a native of Spain, and to Rev. Mr. CLOUGH, a Scotch clergyman who has for some time been engaged in the evangelizing of that country. Rev. Mr. CARRERA, now a Presbyterian minister in Seville, was once a Catholic priest. Rev. Dr. HALL opened the services with prayer, in which he made special invocation that the blessing of God might rest on the efforts being made in behalf of Protestantism in Spain. Rev. HENRY C. RILEY, a Spanish missionary lately returned from Mexico, having been introduced, spoke of the great change that is going on with regard to religion in Spain, and briefly narrated how Mr. CARRERA, betimes, years ago, lost faith in Catholicity, Government in Spain and Rome, and went to Gibraltar, where he remained five years. Here, after the downfall of Queen ISABELLA, he met Gen. PRIM, who told him, "You can now get your Bible under your arm and go back to Spain." He did so. Today the Jesuit Church, in which he once served, is dead; having been abolished by the Government of the Country, laughed at by the Russian and Scotch Protestants, and given to the Spanish Reformers. He then introduced Rev. Mr. CARRERA, as the first President of the Assembly of Reformers that ever met in the Spanish Kingdom.

Rev. Mr. CARRERA read his remarks, his only language being Spanish, having been spoken during his five years' residence in Gibraltar. He said he now had that peace of soul which he never could find in the Catholic communion. He spoke of the Inquisition established in Spain in the sixteenth century, and remarked that, except for the Inquisition, Spain would today have been a different tale to tell. Many of the priests in the sixteenth century were begging to preach Christ, and Him crucified, when Satan, seeing there was danger that his power would decrease if they were allowed to go on, invented the Inquisition with all its torturing, and cruel, cruel, cruel means made use of, the truth as it is in Jesus. He blushed to speak of this truth, but had often thought that God permitted it in order to show what crimes men will commit who reject the Gospel and deny their Lord and Master. But this reign of darkness was not always to be. A new epoch had arrived, and the truth of the Gospel was now more being proclaimed in old Spain. Between 1800 and 1900 a few Spaniards, about seventeen in number, met in secret read the Scriptures and worshiped God together. Having himself been convicted of the errors of Romanism, he found that he might be put to death for the Gospel, and have consigned him to some ecclesiastical dungeon in Granada, or remain as he was (a priest) and play the hypocrite. This latter he could not do. He therefore became a voluntary exile, and went to Granada, where he remained five years praying for the conversion of Spain. In 1868 he came to America, and was arrested for fraud in Gibraltar, and in about one year afterward, owing to the political changes that were brought about, he was publicly preaching the Gospel in Spain. Now a number of Evangelical churches were opened in that country. In July, 1869, the first annual Ecclesiastical Conference met in Seville, and organized the Reformed Church of Spain. This was essentially Presbyterian, and had been recognized by the General Assemblies of Scotland, Ireland and elsewhere. The next session is to meet in October of this year. The speaker then gave sketches of the preachers employed by this Assembly in Cordova, Malaga, Granada and other Spanish cities. He (the speaker) is located at Seville, where he publishes a fortnightly religious review, and where there is a theological seminary for the education of young men designed for the Protestant ministry. About twenty young Spanish ladies are now in attendance, so as to read Bible readers, &c., and many souls are being gathered into the church. These churches are well filled. A spirit of inquiry is being awakened among the people, tracts are circulated and read, and family worship is being introduced, the great doctrine of the Trinity is firmly believed by the Reformed Church of Spain, and the whole Reformed Church is "Christ for Spain, and Spain for Christ." As an instance of the conversions that are made, he narrated how one man who had been a great drunkard came to hear him preach. The consequence was that a reform was wrought in this man's life, and he now preaches the Gospel himself. The speaker said, with tears, that this man now buys with it a copy of the Bible which he presents to some poor person. The whole Spanish race was being awakened to the truth. They (the pioneer Reformers) desired the prayers and the sympathy of American Christians, and such material aid as they could give them, in order to carry on the work of regeneration. When next he visited America he hoped to bring the welcome news that Spain, his native country, had been redeemed.

Rev. Mr. CLOUGH followed in a short appeal for material aid. In Madrid a church, once used by the Jesuits, had been given them, the Government having confiscated it, and all they required to put it in proper order for evangelical worship was about $2,000. They desired also about $2,000 for missionary and school purposes. If any one was ashamed of the Christian generosity of American Christians, M. CARRERA and himself intended to return to Spain within a few days, and apply themselves to the extension of missionary work, the yield of which, in twelve months, would be was very confident, be much greater than he could venture to mention. The reason why they wanted money for the church was not because of a paucity of numbers in their various congregations, but these were made up solely from the poorer classes.

Rev. Dr. ADAMS briefly addressed the congregation on the great field for work in Spain and America, and the glorious field for evangelization which civil and religious liberty had opened up in the first named country, after which a collection was taken up, and the audience was dismissed with the benediction.

Baccalaureate Sermon by President Campbell, of Rutgers College, New-Brunswick, N. J.

Commencement week at Rutgers College, New-Brunswick, N. J., was inaugurated yesterday by the delivery, by the President, Rev. Dr. CAMPBELL, of the baccalaureate sermon in the Second Reformed Church of that City, at the forenoon services. The handsome and commodious edifice was crowded with the élite of the city, and the students and their friends, the latter representing many of the States of the Union. The venerable President selected as his text the first sentence of the fourteenth verse of the fifth chapter of the Gospel according to St. Matthew, "Ye are the light of the world." The speaker chose the text as a justification of the position of the Reformed Church in founding and fostering this College. The considerations of his subject were three: Firstly, a collegiate education lies at the basis of the true scientific and literary culture of the land; secondly, a collegiate education lies at the basis of the religious and theological culture of the Christian ministry; thirdly, a collegiate education furnishes the religious and theological training and culture which are of the first importance to the statesman, lawyer, physician and scientific man of the country. Under the first head Dr. CAMPBELL ably considered the course of scientific education, which regards the Bible as a book to be gazed by a knowledge and application of the laws of nature, with the course of scientific instruction in a college which keeps prominently before the view the existence of a transcendent God. To elucidate the second consideration of his discourse he claimed that as religion is a science, and that the theological collegiate course is necessary to conversions and sanctification of souls, and that the Bible, and its contents, the word of God, have been performed exclusively by college-bred men; that the apologetic in favor of Christianity have all proceeded from college-bred men and that the Protestant Reformation, per excellence, proves the success of the efforts which college-bred men in the remaining time, he then put forth in favor of the truth. Elaborating on the third and last head of his discourse, Dr. CAMPBELL lucidly demonstrated the hopelessness of aspirations for success in professional life without the possession of the advantages of a course of collegiate training and culture. After dwelling at some length on this latter consideration he closed by addressing a valedictory to the graduating class, in which he advised them of the danger of wrecking their young and worthy hopes on the rocks and shoals in life's journey, unless they vigilantly looked ahead and ever kept foremost in their minds' view the moral and religious precepts daily inculcated by their Alma Mater, and made them the basis of their future rule of life, without which mere book lore debases rather than ennobles man.

The Cause of the Laboring Man—Stormy Meeting.

The German General Working Men's Society (Labor Union No. 6) of this City, which belongs to both the General and German Working Men's Unions of this City, last evening commemorated the death of those laborers of Europe who have fallen victims of the labor cause there since the June fight at Paris in 1848. A large meeting for this purpose was held at the Tenth Ward Hotel, corner of Broome and Forsyth streets. On the walls were posted the following names of European cities where wartime-men were killed in defense of their cause: Paris, June 23 to 26, 1848; Lyons, France, 1834; Mannheim, Germany, 1848; Berlin, Prussia, 1848; Vienna, Austria, 1848; Bohemia, Austria, 1870; La Bourbage, Belgium, 1848; Brussels, Belgium, 1848; Boring, Belgium, 1848; La Ferrage, Belgium, 1848; Paris, June, 1849; Rome, 1849. An address was read (in German) in each language. An address was read (in German) in each language. Speeches were delivered by Mr. F. A. SCHOEP, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. R. STARKE, J. TOURNELLE, C. GARL, C. KUHN, F. HOMMINGHAUSEN, and others. The speakers advised organization of the working men in order to secure fair wages.

Open Air Preaching at the Five Points.

Rev. WM. C. STEEL, pastor of the Second-avenue M. E. Church, Harlem, preached yesterday in front of the M. E. Mission premises, in the Five Points, to a motley assemblage of people. Thieves, rags, rum and wretchedness were all represented in those who met to hear the Gospel preached, as Christ himself preached it, in the open air.

The reverend speaker discoursed on "Seeking the Kingdom of God and its righteousness," from Matthew, sixth chapter, thirty-third verse. He showed that the Kingdom meant religion, and that St. Paul said it consisted not in meats and drinks, but in righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. Under the head of righteousness he discoursed of love as the great element of right living. Referring to our Indian troubles, which were the effects of so much sympathy, he urgently insisted that, while they should be cared for and trained as the wards of the nation, it must not be overlooked that their revengeful and bloodthirsty spirit caused most of their distresses. SPOTTED TAIL's eagle feathers, each one, represented a slain victim. The speaker concluded with an appeal to the different nationalities represented in his audience. These off-hand addresses are just what is needed among the people who do not attend the churches.
